And thinn'd the air, till even the birds fell down
Upon the shouters heads. Dryden.

To SHOW. v. a. pret. showed and shewn;

part. pass. shown. [reapen, Sax. schowen, Dutch. This word is frequently written shew; but since it is always pronounced, and often written, show, which is favoured likewise by the Dutch schowen, I have adjusted the orthography to the pronunciation.]

1. To exhibit to view, as an agent.

If I do feign,
O let me in my present wildness die,
And never live to show th' incredulous world
The noble change that I have purposed. Shakspeare.

Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee? Psalms.

Men should not take a charge upon them that they are not fit for, as if singing, dancing, and showing of tricks, were qualifications for a governor. L'Estrange.

I through the ample air in triumph high,
Shall lead hell captive, maugre hell, and show
The pow'rs of darkness bound. Milton.

2. To afford to the eye or notice, as a thing containing or exhibiting.

he could not make a reply; but expressed in dumb show those sentiments of gratitude that were too big for utterance. Addison.
- SHO'WBREAD or SHE'WBREAD. n. s. [show and bread.] Among the Jews, they thus called loaves of bread that the priest of the week put every Sabbath day upon the golden table, which was in the sanctum before the Lord. They were covered with leaves of gold, and were twelve in number, representing the twelve tribes of Israel. They served them up hot, and at the same time took away the stale ones, which could not be eaten but by the priest alone. This offering was accompanied with frankincense and salt.

like a school-boy's theme, beaten general topics.
Swift.
- SHREW. n. s. [schreyen, German, to clamour.] A peevish, malignant, clamorous, spiteful, vexatious, turbulent woman.
It appears in Robert of Gloucester, that this word signified anciently any one perverse or obstinate of either sex.
There dede of hem vor hunger a thousand and mo,
And yat nolde the screwen to none pes go.
Robert of Gloucester.
Be merry, be merry, my wife has all;
For women are shrews both short and tall. Shaksp.
By this reckoning he is more shrew than she.
Shakspeare.
A man had got a shrew to his wife, and there could be no quiet in the house for her. L'Estrange.
Her fallow cheeks her envious mind did shew,
And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the shrew. Dryden.
Every one of them, who is a shrew in domestick life, is now become a scold in politicks. Addison.
- SHREWD. adj. [contracted from shrewed.]
1. Having the qualities of a shrew; malicious; troublesome; mischievous.
Her eldest sister is so curst and shrewd,
That till the father rids his hands of her,
Your love must live a maid. Shakspeare.
2. Maliciously fly; cunning; more artful than good.
It was a shrewd saying of the old monk, that two kind of prisons would serve for all offenders, an inquisition and a bedlam: if any man should deny the being of a God, and the immortality of the soul, such a one should be put into the first, as being a desperate heretick; but if any man should profess to believe these things, and yet allow himself in any known wickedness, such a one should be put into bedlam. Tillotson.
A spiteful saying gratifies so many little passions, that it meets with a good reception; and the man who utters it is looked upon as a shrewd satirist.
Addison.
Corruption proceeds from employing those who have the character of shrewd worldly men, instead of such as have had a liberal education, and trained up in virtue. Addison.
3. Bad; ill-betokening.
Scarce any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself; and consequently we may take it for a shrewd indication and sign, whereby to judge of those who have sinned with too much caution, to suffer the world to charge sins directly upon their conversation. South.
4. Painful; pinching; dangerous; mischievous.
Every of this number,
That have endur'd shrewd nights and days with us,
Shall share the good of our returned fortune. Shaksp.
When a man thinks he has a servant, he finds a traitor that eats his bread, and is readier to do him a mischief, and a shrewd turn, than an open adversary. South.
No enemy is so despicable but he may do a body a shrewd turn. L'Estrange.
- SHRE'WDLY. adv. [from shrewd.]
1. Mischievously; destructively.
This practice hath most shrewdly pass upon thee.
Shakspeare.
At Oxford, his youth, and want of experience in maritime service, had somewhat been shrewdly touched, even before the sluices of popular liberty were set open. Wotton.
2. Vexatiously. It is used commonly of slight mischief, or in ironical expression.
The obstinate and schismatical are like to think themselves shrewdly hurt, forsooth, by being cut off from that body which they choose not to be of.
South.

S H R

'This last allusion rubb'd upon the fore;
Yet seem'd she not to winch, tho' shrewdly pain'd.
Dryden.

3. With good guefs.

Four per cent. increases not the number of lenders;
as any man at first hearing will shrewdly suspect it.
Locke.

SHRE'WDNESS. n. f. [from shrewd.]

1. Sly cunning; archness.

Her garboiles, which not wanted shrewdness of policy too, did you too much disquiet. Shakspeare.
The neighbours round admire his shrewdness,
For songs of loyalty and lewdness. Swift.

2. Mischievousness; petulance.

SHRE'WISH. adj. [from shrew.] Having the qualities of a shrew; froward; petulantly clamorous.

Angelo, you must excuse us;
My wife is shrewish, when I keep not hours.
Shakspeare.

SHRE'WISHLY. adv. [from shrewish.]

Petulantly; peevishly; clamorously;
frowardly.

He speaks very shrewishly; one would think his mother's milk were scarce out of him. Shakspeare.

SHRE'WISHNESS. n. f. [from shrewish.]

The qualities of a shrew; frowardness;
petulance; clamorousness.

I have no gift in shrewishness,
I am a right maid for my cowardice;
Let her not strike me. Shakspeare.

SHREW'MOUSE. n. f. [ſcneapa, Saxon.]

A mouse of which the bite is generally supposed venomous, and to which vulgar tradition assigns such malignity, that she is said to lame the foot over which she runs. I am informed that all these reports are calumnious, and that her feet and teeth are equally harmless with those of any other little mouse. Our ancestors however looked on her with such terror, that they are supposed to have given her name to a scolding woman, whom for her venom they call a shrew.

To SHRIEK. v. n. [ſkrieger, Danish; ſcri-ciolare, Italian.] To cry out inarticulately with anguish or horror; to scream.

On top whereof ay dwelt the ghastly owl,
Shrieking his baleful note. Fairy Queen.
It was the owl that shrick'd, the fatal belman
Which gives the sternest good night. Shakspeare.

Were I the ghost that walk'd,
I'd shrick, that even your ears should rift to hear me.
Shakspeare.

In a dreadful dream
I saw my lord so near destruction,
Then shrick'd myself awake. Denham.
Hark! peace!

At this she shrick'd aloud; the mournful train Echo'd her grief. Dryden.
Why did you shrick out? Dryden.

SHRIEK. n. f. [ſkrieg, Danish; ſcriccio, Italian.] An inarticulate cry of anguish or horror.

Una hearing evermore
His rueful shrieks and groanings, often tore
Her guiltless garments, and her golden hair,
For pity of his pain. Fairy Queen.

Time has been, my senses would have cool'd,
To hear a night shriek, and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir
As life were in't. Shakspeare.

The corps of Almon and the rest are shown;
Shrieks, clamours, murmurs, fill the frighted town.
Dryden.

SHRIPT. n. f. [ſcript, Saxon.] Confession made to a priest. Out of use.

Off with Bernardine's head: I'll give a present ſhript,
And will advise him for a better place. Shakspeare.

S H R

My lord shall never rest;
I'll watch him tame, and talk him out:
His bed shall seem a school, his board a ſhortſt.
Shakspeare.

The duke's commands were absolute;
Therefore, my lord, address you to your ſhriſt,
And be yourself; for you must die this instant.
Rowe.

SHRIGHT, for ſhricked. Spenser.

SHRILL. adj. [A word supposed to be made per onomatopœiam, in imitation of the thing expressed, which indeed it images very happily.] Sounding with a piercing, tremulous, or vibratory sound.

Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch ſhrill echoes from the hollow earth.
Shakspeare.

The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn,
Doth with his lofty and ſhrill sounding throat
Awake the god of day. Shakspeare.

Look up a height, the ſhrill gorg'd lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard. Shakspeare.
Up springs the lark, ſhrill voic'd and loud.
Thomson.

To SHRILL. v. n. [from the adjective.]

To pierce the ear with sharp and quick vibrations of sound.

The sun of all the world is dim and dark;
O heavy herse!
Break we our pipes that ſhrill'd as loud as lark,
O careful verse! Spenser.

Hark how the minstrels 'gin to ſhrill aloud
Their merry musick that rebounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling crowd,
That well agree withouten breach or jar. Spenser.

A ſhrilling trumpet sounded from on high,
And unto battle bade themselves address. Shaksp.
Here no clarion's ſhrilling note
The muse's green retreat can pierce;

The grove, from noisy camps remote,
Is only vocal with my verse. Fent. Ode to L. Gower.
The females round,
Maids, wives, and matrons mix a ſhrilling sound.
Pope.

SHRI'LLY. adv. [from ſhrill.] With a shrill noise.

SHRI'LLNESS. n. f. [from ſhrill.] The

the earth, and ſhrimps in the waters. Derham.

2. A little wrinkled man; a dwarf. In contempt.

It cannot be, this weak and writhled ſhrimp
Should strike such terror in his enemies. Shaksp.
He hath found,
Within the ground,
At last, no ſhrimp,
Whereon to imp
His jolly club. Ben Jonson.

SHRINE. n. f. [ſcſin, Saxon; ſcrinium, Lat.] A case in which something sacred is repositied.

You living pow'rs, inclos'd in stately ſhrine
Of growing trees; you rural gods, that wield
Your scepters here, if to your ears divine
A voice may come, which troubled soul doth yield.
Sidney.

All the world come
To kiss this ſhrine, this mortal breathing saint.
Shakspeare.

Come offer at my ſhrine, and I will help thee.
Shakspeare.

They often plac'd
Within his sanctuary itself their ſhrines, Abominations! and with curſed things
His holy rites profan'd. Milton.

Falling on his knees before her ſhrine,
He thus implor'd her pow'r. Dryden.

Lovers are in rapture at the name of their fair idol; they lavish out all their incense upon that

'Tis like the forc'd gait of a shuffling nag. Shakspeare.

- SHUFFLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of disordering things, or making them take confusedly the place of each other.

Is it not a firmer foundation for contentment, to believe that all things were at first created, and are continually disposed, for the best, than that the whole universe is mere bungling, nothing effected for any purpose, but all ill-favourably cobbled and jumbled together, by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter? Bentley.

2. A trick; an artifice.

The gifts of nature are beyond all shams and shuffles. L'Estrange.

- SHUFFLECAP. n. s. [shuffle and cap.] A play at which money is shaken in a hat.

He lost his money at chuck-farthing, shufflecap, and all-fours. Arbutnot.

- SHUFFLER. n. s. [from shuffle.] He who plays tricks or shuffles.

- SHUFFLINGLY. adv. [from shuffle.] With an irregular gait.

I may go shufflingly, for I was never before walked in trammels; yet I shall drudge and moil at constancy, till I have worn off the hitching in my pace. Dryden.

- To SHUN. v. a. [arcunian, Sax.] To avoid; to decline; to endeavour to escape; to eschew.

Consider death in itself, and nature teacheth Christ to shun it. Hooker.

The lark still shuns on lofty boughs to build,
Her humble nest lies silent in the field. Waller.

Birds and beasts can fly their foe:
So chanticleer, who never saw a fox,
Yet shunn'd him as a sailor shuns the rocks. Dryd.

Cato will train thee up to great
And virtuous deeds: do but observe him well, Thou'lt shun misfortunes, or thou'lt learn to bear them. Addison.

- SHUNLESS. adj. [from shun.] Inevitable; unavoidable.

Alone he enter'd
The mortal gate of the city, which he painted With shunless destiny. Shakspeare.

- To SHUT. v. a. pret. I shut; part. pass.

shut. [scittan, Saxon; schutten, Dutch.]

1. To close so as to prohibit ingress or regress; to make not open.

Kings shall shut their mouths at him. Isaiab.

To a strong tower fled all the men and women, and shut it to them, and gat them up to the top. Judges.

We see more exquisitely with one eye shut than with both open; for that the spirits visual unite more, and become stronger. Bacon.

She open'd, but to shut
Excell'd her power; the gates wide open stood. Milton.

2. To enclose; to confine.

Before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith, which should afterwards be revealed. Galatians.

They went in, male and female of all flesh; and the Lord shut him in. Genesis.

Harden not thy heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother. Deuteronomy.

6. To SHUT out. To exclude; to deny admission to.

Beat in the reed,
The juster you drive it to shut off the rain. Tupper.

In such a night
To shut me out! pour on, I will endure. Shakspeare.

Wisdom at one entrance quite shut out. Milton.

He, in his walls confin'd,
Shut out the woes which he too well divin'd. Dryden.

Sometimes the mind fixes itself with so much earnestness on the contemplation of some objects, that it shuts out all other thoughts. Locke.

7. To SHUT up. To close; to make impervious; to make impassable, or impossible to be entered or quitted. Up is sometimes little more than emphatical.

Woe unto you scribes! for you shut up the kingdom of heaven against men. Matthew.

Dangerous rocks shut up the passage. Raleigh.

What barbarous customs!
Shut up a desert shore to drowning men,
And drive us to the cruel seas agen. Dryden.

His mother shut up half the rooms in the house, in which her husband or son had died. Addison.

8. To SHUT up. To confine; to enclose; to imprison.

Thou hast known my soul in adversities; and not shut me up into the hands of the enemy. Psalms.

A loss at sea, a fit of sickness, are trifles, when we consider whole families put to the sword, wretches shut up in dungeons. Addison.

Lucullus, with a great fleet, shut up Mithridates in Pitany. Arbutnot.

9. To SHUT up. To conclude.

The king's a-bed;
He is shut up in measureless content. Shakspeare.

Although he was patiently heard as he delivered his embassy, yet, in the shutting up of all, he received no more but an insolent answer. Knolles.

To leave you blest, I would be more accurst
Than death can make me; for death ends our woes,
And the kind grave shuts up the mournful scene. Dryden.

When the scene of life is shut up, the slave will be above his master, if he has acted better. Collier.

- To SHUT. v. n. To be closed; to close itself: as, flowers open in the day, and shut at night.

SHUT. participial adjective. Rid; clear; free.

We must not pray in one breath to find a thief, and in the next to get shut of him. L'Estrange.

- SHUT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Close; act of shutting.

I fought him round his palace, made enquiry
Of all the slaves: but had for answer,
That since the shut of evening none had seen him. Dryden.

2. Small door or cover.

The wind-gun is charged by the forcible compression of air; the imprisoned air serving, by the help little falls or shuts within, to stop the vents by which it was admitted. Wilkins.

In a very dark chamber, at a round hole, about one third part of an inch broad, made in the shut of a window, I placed a glass prism. Newton.

There were no shuts or stopples made for the animal's ears, that any loud noise might awaken it. Ray.

- SHUTTER. n. s. [from shut.]

1. One that shuts.

2. A cover; a door.

The wealthy,
In lofty litters borne, can read and write,
Or sleep at ease the shutters make it night. Dryden.

- SHUTTLE. n. s. [schietpoole, Dutch; skutul, Islandick.] The instrument with which the weaver shoots the cross threads.

I know life is a shuttle. Shakspeare.
Like shuttles through the loom, so swiftly glide
My feather'd hours. Sandys.
What curious loom does chance by ev'ning spread!
With what fine shuttle weave the virgin's thread,
Which like the spider's net hangs o'er the mead!
Blackmore.

SHUTTLECOCK. n. s. [See SHUTTLECOCK.] A cork stuck with feathers, and beaten backward and forward.

With dice, with cards, with billiards far unfit,
Wuh shuttlecocks misseeming manly wit.
Hubberd's Tale.

SHY. adj. [schorwe, Dutch; schifo, Ital.]

1. Reserved; not familiar; not free of behaviour.

I know you shy to be oblig'd,
And still more loth to be oblig'd by me. Southern.
What makes you so shy, my good friend? There's nobody loves you better than I. Arbutnot.

2. Cautious; wary; chary.

I am very shy of employing corrosive liquors in the preparation of medicines. Boyle.
We are not shy of assent to celestial informations, because they were hid from ages. Glanville.
We grant, although he had much wit,
H' was very shy of using it,
As being loth to wear it out,
And therefore bore it not about. Hudibras.

3. Keeping at a distance; unwilling to approach.

A shy fellow was the duke; and, I believe, I know the cause of his withdrawing. Shakspeare.
She is represented in such a shy retiring posture,
and covers her bosom with one of her hands.
Addison.

But when we come to seize th' inviting prey,
Like a shy ghost, it vanishes away. Norris.

4. Suspicious; jealous; unwilling to suffer near acquaintance.

The bruise imposthumated, and turned to a stinking ulcer, which made every body shy to come near her. Arbutnot.
The horses of the army, having been daily led before me, were no longer shy, but would come up to my very feet without starting. Swift.
Princes are, by wisdom of state, somewhat shy of their successors; and there may be supposed in queens regnant a little proportion of tenderness that way more than in kings. Wotton.

SIBILANT. adj. [sibilans, Lat.] Hissing.

It were easy to add a nasal letter to each of the other pair of hissing and sibilant letters. Holder.

SIBILATION. n. s. [from sibilo, Lat.] A hissing sound.

Metals, quenched in water, give a sibilation or hissing sound. Bacon.
A pipe, a little moistened on the inside, maketh a more solemn sound than if the pipe were dry; but yet with a sweet degree of sibilation or purling.
Bacon.

man's life, than the disparity we often find in him sick and well. Pope.

2. Disordered in the organs of digestion; ill in the stomach.

3. Corrupted.

What we oft do best,
By sick interpreters, or weak ones, is Not ours, or not allow'd: what worst, as oft Hitting a grosser quality, is cried up
For our best act. Shakspeare.

4. Disgusted.

I do not, as an enemy to peace,
Troop in the throngs of military men:
But rather shew a while like fearful war,
To diet rank minds sick of happiness,
And purge th' obstructions which begin to stop
Our very veins of life. Shakspeare.
He was not so sick of his master as of his work.
L'Estrange.

Why will you break the sabbath of my days,
Now sick alike of envy and of praise? Pope.

Nor do his wings with sickly feathers droop.
Dryden.

Would we know what health and ease are worth, let us ask one that is sickly, or in pain, and we have the price. Grew.

There affectation, with a sickly mien,
Shows in her cheek the roses of eighteen;
Practis'd to lisp, and hang the head aside,
Faints into airs, and languishes with pride. Pope.

When on my sickly couch I lay,
Impatient both of night and day,
Then Stella ran to my relief. Swift.

Your bodies are not only poor and perishing, like your clothes; but like infected clothe, fill you with all diseases and distempers, which oppress the soul with sickly appetites, and vain cravings. Law.

2. Faint; weak; languid.

The moon grows sickly at the sight of day,
And early cocks have summon'd me away.
Dryden.

To animate the doubtful fight,
Namur in vain expects that ray;
In vain France hopes the sickly light
Should shine near William's fuller day. Prior.

To Si'CKLY. v. a. [from the adjective.]

Their weapons only
Seem'd on our side; but for their spirits and souls,
This word rebellion, it had froze them up,
As fish are in a pond. Shakespeare.

Favour, custom, and at last number, will be on the side of grace. Spratt.

Men he always took to be
His friends, and dogs his enemy;
Who never so much hurt had done him,
As his own side did falling on him. Hudibras.

In the serious part of poetry the advantage is wholly on Chaucer's side. Dryden.

That person, who fills their chair, has justly gained the esteem of all sides by the impartiality of his behaviour. Addison.

Let not our James, though foil'd in arms, despair,
Whilst on his side he reckons half the fair. Tickel.

Some valuing those of their own side, or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind:
Fondly we think we honour merit then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men. Pope.

He from the taste obscene reclaims our youth,
And sets the passions on the side of truth;

Forms the soft bosom with the gentlest art,
And pours each human virtue in the heart. Pope.

7. Any part placed in contradistinction or opposition to another. It is used of persons, or propositions, respecting each other.

There began a sharp and cruel fight, many being slain and wounded on both sides. Knolles.

The plague is not easily received by such as continually are about them that have it; on the other side, the plague taketh soonest hold of those that come out of a fresh air. Bacon.

I am too well satisfied of my own weakness to be pleased with any thing I have written; but, on the other side, my reason tells me, that what I have long considered may be as just as what an ordinary judge will condemn. Dryden.

My secret wishes would my choice decide;
But open justice bends to neither side. Dryden.

It is granted, on both sides, that the fear of a Deity doth universally possess the minds of men. Tillotson.

and if there be factions, it is good to side a man's self whilst rising, and balance himself when placed. Bacon.

2. To take a party; to engage in a faction.

Vex'd are the nobles who have sided
In his behalf. Shakespeare.

As soon as discontents drove men into sidings, as ill humours fall to the disaffected part, which causes inflammations, so did all who affected novelties adhere to that side. King Charles.

Terms rightly conceived, and notions duly fitted to them, require a brain free from all inclination to siding, or affection to opinions for the authors sakes, before they be well understood. Digby.

Not yet so dully desperate
To side against ourselves with fate;
As criminals, condemn'd to suffer,
Are blinded first, and then turn'd over. Hudibras.

The princes differ and divide;
Some follow law, and some with beauty side. Granville.

rectum of horses, the sidefly proceeds. Derham.

To Si'DLE. v. n. [from side.]

1. To go with the body the narrowest way.

The chaffering with dissenters is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time, and that not without stooping and siding, and squeezing his body. Swift.

I passed very gently and siding through the two principal streets. Swift.

2. To lie on the side.

A fellow nailed up maps in a gentleman's closet, some siding, and others upside down, the better to adjust them to the pannels. Swift.

Si'DELONG. adj. [side and long.] Lateral;
oblique; not in front; not direct.

She darted from her eyes a sidelong glance,
Just as she spoke, and like her words, it flew;
Seem'd not to beg what she then bid me do. Dryd.

The deadly wound is in thy soul:
When thou a tempting harlot dost behold,
And when she casts on thee a sidelong glance,
Then try thy heart, and tell me if it dance. Dryd.

The reason of the planets motions in curve lines is the attraction of the sun, and an oblique or side- long impulse. Locke.

Si'DELONG. adv.

1. Laterally; obliquely; not in pursuit;
not in opposition.

As if on earth
Winds underground, or waters, forcing way,
Sidelong had push'd a mountain from his seat,
Half sunk with all his pines. Milton.

As a lion, bounding in his way,
With force augmented bears against his prey, Sidelong to seize. Dryden.

2. On the side.

If it prove too wet, lay your pots sidelong; but shade these which blow from the afternoon sun. Evelyn.

Si'DER. n. s. See CIDER.

Si'DERAL. adj. [from fidus, Lat.] Starry; astral.

These changes in the heav'ns, though slow, produc'd
Like change on sea and land; sidereal blast,
Vapour and mist, and exhalation hot,
Corrupt and pestilent! Milton.

The musk gives Sure hopes of racy wine, and in its youth,
Its tender nonage, loads the spreading boughs
With large and juicy offspring, that defies
The vernal nippings and cold sidereal blasts. Philips.

S I E

SIDWAYS. } adv. [from side and way, or SIDWISE. } wise.] Laterally; on one side.

The fair blossom hangs the head
Sideways, as on a dying bed;
And those pearls of dew she wears Prove to be presaging tears. Milton.

If the image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refractions, the same oblong image would, by a second refraction made sideways, be drawn out as much in breadth by the like dilatation of the rays, or other casual inequality of the refraction sideways. Newton.

SIEGE. n. f. [siege, French.]

1. The act of besetting a fortified place; a leaguer.

Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie, Till famine eat them up. Shakspeare.

It seemed, by the manner of their proceeding, that the Turks purposed rather by long siege than by assault to take the town. Knolles.

The more I see
Pleasures about me, so much more I feel Torment within me, as from the hateful siege
Of contraries. Milton.

2. Any continued endeavour to gain possession.

Beat away the busy meddling fiend,
That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul,
And from his bosom purge this black despair. Shakspeare.

Give me so much of your time, in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of Ford's wife. Shakspeare.

Love stood the siege, and would not yield his breast. Dryden.

3. [siege, Fr.] Seat; throne. Obsolete.

Drawing to him the eyes of all around,
From lofty siege began these words aloud to sound. Fairy Queen.

4. Place; class; rank. Obsolete.

I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege. Shakspeare.

Your sum of parts
Did not together pluck such envy from him,
As did that one, and that in my regard
Of the unworthiest siege. Shakspeare.

5. [siege, French.] Stool.

It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permeant parts, as the mouths of the mefaraicks, and accompanieth the inconvertible portion unto the siege. Brown.

To SIEGE. v. a. [sieger, Fr.] To besiege.

Not in use.

Him he had long oppress'd with tort,
And fast imprison'd in sieged tort. Fairy Queen.

SIEVE. n. f. [from sift.] Hair or lawn strained upon a hoop, by which flower is separated from bran, or fine powder from coarse; a boulder; a fearce.

Thy counsel
Falls now into my ears as profitless
As water in a sieve. Shakspeare.

S I G

In a sieve I'll thither sail,
And, like a rat without a tail,
I'll do—I'll do—I'll do. Shakspeare.

An innocent found a sieve, and presently fell to stopping the holes. L'Estrange.

If life sunk through you like a leaky sieve,
Accuse yourself you liv'd not while you might. Dryden.

To SIFT. v. a. [siften, Sax. siften, Dut.]

1. To separate by a sieve.

In the sifting of such favour, all that came out could not be expected to be pure meal, but must have a mixture of padar and bran. Wotton.

2. To separate; to part.

When yellow sands are sifted from below,
The glitt'ring billows give a golden show. Dryden.

3. To examine; to try.

We have sifted your objections against those pre-eminences royal. Hooker.

All which the wit of Calvin could from thence draw, by sifting the very utmost sentence and syllable, is no more than that certain speeches seem to intimate, that all christian churches ought to have their elderships. Hooker.

I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,
The king thy sovereign is not quite exempt
From envious malice of thy swelling heart. Shakspeare.
As near as I could sift him on that argument. Shakspeare.

Opportunity I here have had
To try thee, sift thee, and confels have found thee
Proof against all temptation, as a rock
Of adamant. Milton.

One would think that every member, who embraces with vehemence the principles of either of these parties, had thoroughly sifted and examined them, and was secretly convinced of their preference to those he rejects. Addison.

SIFTER. n. f. [from sift.] He who sifts.

SIG was used by the Saxons for victory; Sigbert, famous for victory; Sigward, victorious preserver; Sigard, conquering temper: and almost in the same sense are Nicocles, Nicomachus, Nicander, Victor, Victorinus, Vincentius, &c. Gibson.

To SIGH. v. n. [sican, sicetan, Saxon; suchten, Dutch.] To emit the breath audibly, as in grief.

I lov'd the maid I married; never man Sigh'd truer breath. Shakspeare.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To christian intercessors. Shakspeare.

He sighed deeply in his spirit, and faith, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? Mark.
For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, will I arise. Psalms.

Happier he,
Who seeks not pleasure through necessity,
Than such as once on slipp'ry thrones were plac'd,
And, chasing, sigh to think themselves as chas'd. Dryden.

The nymph too longs to be alone;
Leaves all the swains, and sighs for one. Prior.

To SIGH. v. a. To lament; to mourn.

Not in use.

Ages to come, and men unborn,
Shall bless her name, and sigh her fate. Prior.

SIGH. n. f. [from the verb.] A violent and audible emission of the breath which has been long retained, as in sadness.

Full often has my heart swoln with keeping my sighs imprison'd; full often have the tears I drove back from mine eyes turned back to drown my heart. Sidney.

Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes. Shakspeare.

What a sigh is there! The heart is sorely charg'd. Shakspeare.

Laughing, if loud, ends in a deep sigh; and all pleasures have a sting in the tail, though they carry beauty on the face. Taylor.

In Venus' temple, on the sides were seen Issuing sighs, that smok'd along the wall. Dryden.

S I G

SIGHT. n. f. [geride, Saxon; sicht, gesicht, Dutch.]

1. Perception by the eye; the sense of seeing.

He's dipt for certain, and plays least in sight. Dryden.

3. Act of seeing or beholding; view.

Nine things to sight required are;
The pow'r to see, the light, the visible thing,
Being not too small, too thin, too nigh, too far,
Clear space, and time, the form distinct to bring. Davies.

Mine eyes pursued him still, but under shade
Lost sight of him. Milton.

What form of death could him affright,
Who unconcern'd, with steadfast sight,
Could view the surges mounting steep,
And monsters rolling in the deep? Dryden.

Having little knowledge of the circumstances of those of St. Paul writ to, it is not strange that many things lie concealed to us, which they who were concerned in the letter understood at first sight. Locke.

4. Notice; knowledge.

It was writ as a private letter to a person of piety, upon an assurance that it should never come to any one's sight but her own. Wake.

Their armed slaves in charge, their beavers down,
Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights of steel. Shakspeare.

7. Spectacle; show; thing to be seen.

Thus are my eyes still captive to one sight;
Thus all my thoughts are slaves to one thought still. Sidney.

Them seem'd they never saw a sight so fair
Of fowls so lovely, that they sure did deem Them heavenly born. Spenser.

Not an eye
But is a-weary of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more. Shakspeare.

Moses said, I will turn aside and see this great sight, why the bush is not burnt. Exodus.

I took a felucca at Naples to carry me to Rome, that I might not run over the same sights a second time. Addison.

Not proud Olympus yields a nobler sight,
Though gods assembled grace his tow'ring height,
Than what more humble mountains offer here,
Where, in their blessings, all those gods appear. Pope.

Before you pass th' imaginary sights
Of lords, and earls, and dukes, and garter'd knights,
While the spread fan o'er-shades your closing eyes,
Then give one flirt, and all the vision flies. Pope.

SIGHTED. adj. [from sight.] Seeing in a particular manner. It is used only in composition, as quicksighted, shortsighted.

As they might, to avoid the weather, pull the joints of the coach up close, so they might put each end down, and remain as discovered and open *figh*ted as on horseback. Sidney.

The king was very quick *figh*ted in discerning difficulties, and raising objections, and very slow in mastering them. Clarendon.

SIGHTFULNESS. n. f. [from *figh*t and full.] Perspicuity; clearness of sight. Not in use.

But still, although we fail of perfect rightfulness, Seek we to tame these childish superfluities; Let us not wink, though void of purest *figh*tfulness. Sidney.

SIM'ILAR. } adj. [similaire, Fr. from SIM'ILARY. } similis, Lat.]

1. Homogeneous; having one part like another; uniform.

Minerals appear to the eye to be perfectly similar, as metals; or at least to consist but of two or three distinct ingredients, as cinnabar. Boyle.

2. Resembling; having resemblance.

The laws of England, relative to those matters, were the original and exemplar from whence those similar or parallel laws of Scotland were derived. Hale.

SIMILARITY. n. f. [from similar.] Likeness; uniformity.

The blood and chyle are mixed, and by attrition attenuated; by which the mixture acquires a greater degree of fluidity and similarity, or homogeneity of parts. Arbutnot.

SIM'ILE. n. f. [simile, Lat.] A comparison by which any thing is illustrated or aggrandized.

Their rhimes,
Full of protest, of oath, and big compare,
Want similes. Shakspeare.

Lucentio slipp'd me, like his greyhound,
Which runs himself, and catches for his master.—
—A good swift simile, but something curriish. Shaks.

In argument,
Similes are like songs in love;
They much describe, they nothing prove. Prior.

Poets, to give a loose to a warm fancy, not only expatiate in their similes, but introduce them too frequently. Garth.

SIMI'LITUDE. n. f. [similitudo, Fr. similitudo, Lat.]

1. Likeness; resemblance.

Similitudo of substance would cause attraction, where the body is wholly freed from the motion of gravity; for then lead would draw lead. Bacon.

Our immortal souls, while righteous, are by God himself beautified with the title of his own image and similitudo. Raleigh.

Let us make man in our image, man
In our similitudo, and let them rule
Over the fish and fowl. Milton.

Similitudo to the Deity was not regarded in the things they gave divine worship to, and looked on as symbols of the god they worshipped. Stillingfleet.

If we compare the picture of a man, drawn at the years of seventeen, with that of the same person at the years of threescore, hardly the least trace or similitudo of one face can be found in the other. Soutb.

Fate some future bard shall join
In sad similitudo of griefs to mine;
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.

2. Comparison; simile.

Plutarch, in the first of his tractates, by sundry similitudes, shews us the force of education. Wotton.

Tasso, in his similitudes, never departed from the woods; that is, all his comparisons were taken from the country. Dryden.

SIM'ITAR. n. f. [See CIMETER.] A crooked or falcated sword with a convex edge.

To SIMMER. v. n. [a word made probably from the sound, but written, by Skinner, simber.] To boil gently; to boil with a gentle hissing.

S I M

SIMONI'ACAL. adj. [from simoniack.] Guilty of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferment.

Add to your criminals the simoniackal ladies, who seduce the sacred order into the difficulty of breaking their troth. Spectator.

SIM'ONY. n. f. [simonie, Fr. simonia, Lat.] The crime of buying or selling church preferment.

One that by suggestion
Tied all the kingdom; simony was fair play,
His own opinion was his law. Shakspeare.

Many papers remain in private hands, of which one is of simony; and I wish the world might see it, that it might undeceive some patrons, who think they have discharged that great trust to God and man, if they take no money for a living, though it may be parted with for other ends less justifiable. Walton.

No simony or sinecure is known;
There works the bee, no honey for the drone. Garth.

To SIM'PER. v. n. [from rymbelan, Saxon, to keep holyday, Skinner.] He derives simmer from the same word, and confirms his etymology by writing it simber. It is perhaps derived from simmer, as it may seem to imitate the dimples of water gentle boiling.] To smile; generally to smile foolishly.

A made countenance about her mouth between simpering and smiling, her head bowing somewhat down, seemed to languish with over-much idleness. Sidney.

I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women, as I perceive by your simpering none of you hate them, to like as much as pleases them. Shaks.

Stars above simper and shine,
As having keys unto thy love, while poor I pine. Herbert.

Let then the fair one beautifully cry,
Or drest in smiles of sweet Cecilia shine,
With simpr'ing angels, palms, and harps divine. Pope.

SIM'PER. n. f. [from the verb.] Smile; generally a foolish smile.

The wit at his elbow stared him in the face with so bewitching a grin, that the whistler relaxed his fibres into a kind of simper, and at length burst out into an open laugh. Addison.

Great Tibbald nods: the proud Parnassian sneers,
The conscious simper, and the jealous leer,

SIM'PLE. adj. [simplex, Lat. simple, Fr.]

1. Plain; artless; unskilled; undefining; sincere; harmless.

Were it not to satisfy the minds of the simpler sort of men, these nice curiosities are not worthy the labour which we bestow to answer them. Hooker.

They meet upon the way
A simple husbandman in garments grey. Hub. Tale.

I am a simple woman, much too weak
T' oppose your cunning. Shakspeare.

O Ethelinda,
My heart was made to fit and pair with thine,
Simple and plain, and fraught with artless tenderness. Rowe.

In simple manners all the secret lies;
Be kind and virtuous, you'll be blest and wise. Young.

S I M

2. Uncompounded; unmingled; single; only one; plain; not complicated.

To make the compound pass for the rich metal simple, is an adulteration or counterfeiting. Bacon.

Simple philosophically signifies single, but vulgarly foolish. Watts.

Among substances, some are called simple, some compound, whether taken in a philosophical or vulgar sense. If we take simple and compound in a vulgar sense, then all those are simple substances which are generally esteemed uniform in their natures: so every herb is called a simple, and every metal a mineral; though the chymist perhaps may find all his several elements in each of them. Watts.

Let Newton, pure intelligence, whom God
To mortals lent, to trace his boundless works,
From laws, sublimely simple, speak thy fame
In all philosophy. Thomson.

3. Silly; not wise; not cunning.

The simple believeth every word; but the prudent man looketh well to his going. Proverbs.

Dick, simple odes too many show ye
My servile complaisance to Chloe. Prior.

SIM'PLE. n. f. [simple, French.] A single ingredient in a medicine; a drug. It is popularly used for an herb.

Of simples in these groves that grow,
We'll learn the perfect skill;
The nature of each herb to know,
Which cures, and which can kill. Drayton.

Our foster nurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks; that to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish. Shakspeare.

He would ope his leathern scrip,
And shew me simples of a thousand names,
Telling their itrange and vigorous faculties. Milton.

What virtue is in this remedy lies in the naked simple itself, as it comes over from the Indies. Temp.

Around its entries nodding poppies grow,
And all cool simples that sweet rest bestow;
Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,
And passing sheds it on the silent plains. Dryden.

Med'cine is mine: what herbs and simples grow
In fields and forests, all their pow'rs I know. Dryd.

To SIM'PLE. v. n. To gather simples.

As once the foaming boar he chas'd,
Lascivious Cierce well the youth survey'd,
As simpling on the flow'ry hills he stray'd. Garth.

SIM'PLENESS. n. f. [from simple.] The quality of being simple.

I will hear that play:
For never any thing can be amiss,
When simpleness and duty tender it. Shakspeare.

Such perfect elements may be found in these four known bodies that we call pure ones; for they are least compounded, and approach most to the simples of the elements. Digby.

SIM'PLER. n. f. [from simple.] A simplist, an herbarist.

SIM'PLESS. n. f. [simpleste, Fr.] Simplicity; silliness; folly. Obsolete.

Their weeds been not so nightly were,
Such simpleste mought them shend,
They been yclad in purple and pall,
They reign and ruler over all. Spenser.

SIM'PLETON. n. f. [from simple.] A silly mortal; a trifier; a foolish fellow. A low word.

A country farmer sent his man to look after an ox; the simpleton went hunting up and down. L'Est.

Those letters may prove a discredit, as lasting as mercenary scribbles, or curious simpletons, can make it. Pope.

SIMPLI'CITY. n. f. [simplicitas, Latin; simplicité, French.]

1. Plainness; artlessness; not subtilty; not cunning; not deceit.

The sweet-minded Philoclea was in their degree of well-doing, to whom the not knowing of evil serveth for a ground of virtue, and hold their inward powers in better form, with an unspotted simplicity, than many who rather cunningly seek to know what goodness is, than willingly take unto themselves the following of it. Sidney.

S I M

They keep the reverend simplicity of ancient times. Hooker.

In low simplicity,
He lends out money gratis, and brings down
The rate of usance. Shakspeare.

Marquis Dorset, a man for his harmless simplicity neither disliked nor much regarded, was created duke. Hayward.

Suspicion sleeps
At wisdom's gate, and to simplicity
Refigns her charge. Milton.

Of manners gentle, or affections mild;
In wit a man, simplicity a child. Pope.

The native elegance and simplicity of her manners were accompanied with real benevolence of heart.
Female Quixote.

2. Plainness; not subtilty; not abstruseness.

Those enter into farther speculation herein, which is the itch of curiosity, and content not themselves with the simplicity of that doctrine, within which this church hath contained herself. Hammond.

3. Plainness; not finery.

They represent our poet, when he left Mantua for Rome, dressed in his best habit, too fine for the place whence he came, and yet retained part of its simplicity. Dryden.

4. Singleness; not composition; state of being uncompounded.

Mandrakes afford a papaverous unpleasant odour in the leaf or apple, discoverable in their simplicity and mixture. Brown.

We are led to conceive that great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity than now it is, as to conceive a watch once in its first and simple materials. Burnet.

5. Weakness; silliness.

Many that know what they should do, would nevertheless dissemble it, and, to excuse themselves, pretend ignorance and simplicity, which now they cannot. Hooker.

How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity, and fools hate knowledge? Proverbs.

- SIMPLIST. n. f. [from simple.]* One skilled in simples.

A plant so unlike a rose, it hath been mistaken by some good simplists for amomum. Brown.

- SIMPLY. adv. [from simple.]*

1. Without art; without subtilty; plainly; artlessly.

Accomplishing great things by things deem'd weak;

Subverting worldly strong and worldly wise
By simply meek. Milton.

2. Of itself; without addition.

This question about the changing of laws concerneth only such laws as are positive, and do make that now good or evil, by being commanded or forbidden, which otherwise of itself were not simply the one or the other. Hooker.

3. Merely; solely.

Under man, no creature in the world is capable of felicity and bliss; because their chiefest perfection consisteth in that which is best for them, but not in that which is simply best, as ours doth. Hooker.

I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall; simply the thing I am Shall make me live. Shakspeare.

To say or to do ought with memory and imitation, no purpose or respect should sooner move us, than simply the love of God and of mankind. Milton.

4. Foolishly; sillily.

- SIMULAR. n. f. [from simulo, Latin.]* One that counterfeits.

Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjurer, thou simular of virtue,
That art incestuous. Shakspeare.

- SIMULATION. n. f. [simulation, French; simulatio, from simulo, Latin.]* That part of hypocrisy which pretends that to be which is not.

Simulation is a vice rising of a natural falseness, or fearfulness; or of a mind that hath some main faults; which, because a man must needs disguise, it maketh him practise simulation. Bacon.

S I N

From the unquestionable virtues of her person and mind, he well expressed his love in an act and time of no simulation towards his end, bequeathing her all his mansion-houses, and a power to dispose of his whole personal estate. Wotton.

For distinction sake, a deceiving by word is commonly called a lye; and deceiving by actions, gestures, or behaviour, is called simulation or hypocrisy. South.

- SIMULTANEOUS. adj. [simultaneus, Lat.]*

Acting together; existing at the same time.

If the parts may all change places at the same time, without any respect of priority or posteriority to each other's motion, why may not bullets, closely crowded in a box, move by a like mutual and simul- taneous exchange? Glanville.

- SIN. n. f. [ryn, Saxon.]*

1. An act against the laws of God; a violation of the laws of religion.

It is great sin to swear unto a sin,
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath. Shakspeare.

How hast thou the heart,
Being a divine, a ghastly confessor,
A sin absolver, and my friend profest,
To mangle me with that word banishment? Shaks.
But those that sleep, and think not on their sins,
Pinch them. Shakspeare.

Thou knowest, Lord, that I am pure from all sin with man. Tobit.

2. Habitual negligence of religion.

Sin, death, and hell, have set their marks upon him,

And all their ministers attend on him. Shakspeare.

Dishonest shame

Of nature's works: honour dishonourable,

Sin-bred, how have ye troubled all mankind! Milt.

I would not foil these pure ambrosial weeds,
With the rank vapours of the sin-worn mould. Milton.

Is there no means, but that a sin-sick land
Should be let blood with such a boist'rous hand?

Daniel.

Vice or virtue chiefly imply the relation of our actions to men in this world: sin and holiness rather imply their relation to God and the other world. Watts.

Light from her thought, a summer's careless robe,
Fell each affection of this sin-worn globe. Brooke.

3. It is used by Shakspeare emphatically for a man enormously wicked.

Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land

Of noble Buckingham. Henry VIII.

- TO SIN. v. n. [from the noun.]*

1. To neglect the laws of religion; to violate the laws of religion.

Stand in awe and sin not. Psalms.

Many also have perish'd, err'd, and sinned for women. Esdas.

He shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. 1 John.

2. To offend against right.

I am a man

More *sin*n'd against than sinning. Shakspeare.

And who but wishes to invert the laws

Of order, sins against th' eternal cause. Pope.

- SINCE. adv. [formed by contraction from sithence, or sith thence, from ride, Sax.]*

1. Because that.

Since the clearest discoveries we have of other spirits, besides God and our own souls, are imparted by revelation, the information of them should be taken from thence. Locke.

Since truth and constancy are vain,
Since neither love, nor sense of pain,
Nor force of reason, can persuade,
Then let example be obey'd. Glanville.

2. From the time that.

Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden ever since I was thine unto this day? Numbers.

He is the most improved mind since you saw him that ever was. Pope.

3. Ago; before this.

About two years since, it so fell out, that he was brought to a great lady's house. Sidney.

Spies held me in chace, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about; else had I, sir, Half an hour since, brought my report. Shakspeare.

A law was made no longer since than the twenty-eighth of Henry the Eighth. Davies.

How many ages since has Virgil writ! Roscommon.

- SINCE. preposition.* After; reckoning from some time past to the time present.

He since the morning hour set out from heav'n. Milton.

If such a man arise, I have a model by which he may build a nobler poem than any extant since the ancients. Dryden.

- SINCE'RE. adj. [sincerus, Lat. sincere, Fr.]*

1. Unhurt; uninjured.

He tried a tough well chosen spear;

Th' inviolable body stood sincere. Dryden.

2. Pure; unmingled.

Pardon my tears, 'tis joy which bids them flow,

A joy which never was sincere till now;

That which my conquest gave I could not prize,
Or 'twas imperfect, till I saw your eyes. Dryden.

The pleasures of sense, beasts taste sincere and pure always, without mixture or alloy; without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them. Atterbury.

Animal substances differ from vegetable, in that,
being reduced to ashes, they are perfectly insipid, and in that there is no sincere acid in any animal juice. Arbutnot.

In English I would have all gallicisms avoided, that our tongue may be sincere, and that we may keep to our own language. Felton.

3. Honest; undissembling; uncorrupt.

This top proud fellow,

Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but

From sincere motions by intelligence

I do know to be corrupt. Shakspeare.

Nor troubled at these tidings from the earth,

Which your *sincere*st care could not prevent;

Foretold so lately what would come to pass,

When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from hell. Milton.

The more sincere you are, the better it will fare with you at the great day of account. In the mean while, give us leave to be sincere too, in condemning heartily what we heartily disapprove. Waterland.

Through the want of a sincere intention of pleasing God in all our actions, we fall into such irregularities of life as, by the ordinary means of grace, we should have power to avoid. Law.

- SINCERELY. adv. [from sincere.]* Honestly; without hypocrisy; with purity of heart.

The purer and perfecter our religion is, the worthier effects it hath in them who stedfastly and sincerely embrace it. Hooker.

That you may, fair lady,

Perceive I speak sincerely, the king's majesty

Does purpose honour to you. Shakspeare.

In your whole reasoning, keep your mind sincerely intent in the pursuit of truth. Watts.

- SINCERENESS. } n. f. [sincerité, French; }*

- SINCERITY. } from sincere.]*

1. Honesty of intention; purity of mind.

Jesus Christ has purchased for us terms of reconciliation, who will accept of sincerity instead of perfection; but then this sincerity implies our honest endeavours to do our utmost. Rogers.

2. Freedom from hypocrisy.

In thy comfort cease to fear a foe;

For thee he feels sincerity of woe. Pope.

- SINDON. n. f. [Lat.]* A fold; a wrapper.

There were found a book and a letter, both written in fine parchment, and wrapped in sindons of linen. Bacon.

- SINE. n. f. [sinus, Latin.]* A right sine, in geometry, is a right line drawn from one end of an arch perpendicularly upon the diameter drawn from the other end of that arch; or it is half the chord of twice the arch. Harris.

Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray, considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio. Cheyne.

SI'NECURE, n. f. [sine, without, and cura, care.] An office which has revenue without any employment.

A sinécure is a benefice without cure of souls. Ayliffe.

No simony nor sinécure were known,
Nor would the bee work honey for the drone. Garth.
SI'NEW, n. f. [renpe, Saxon; senewen, Dutch.]

1. A tendon; the ligament by which the joints are moved.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews. Shakspeare.

The rooted fibres rose, and from the wound
Black bloody drops distill'd upon the ground:
Mute and amaz'd, my hair with terror stood;
Fear shrunk my sinews, and congeal'd my blood. Dryden.

A sinew cracked seldom recovers its former strength. Locke.

2. Applied to whatever gives strength or compactness: as, money is the sinews of war.

Some other sinews there are, from which that overplus of strength in persuasion doth arise. Hooker.

Such discouraging of men in the ways of an active conformity to the church's rules, cracks the sinews of government; for it weakens and damps the spirits of the obedient. South.

In the principal figures of a picture, the painter is to employ the sinews of his art; for in them consists the principal beauties of his work. Dryden.

3. Muscle or nerve.

The feeling pow'r, which is life's root,
Through ev'ry living part itself doth shed
By sinews, which extend from head to foot;
And, like a net, all o'er the body spread. Davies.

To SI'NEW, v. a. [from the noun.] To knit as by sinews. Not in use.

Ask the lady Bona for thy queen;
So shalt thou sinew both these lands together. Shakspeare.

Ourselves well sinewed to our defence. Shakspeare.

SI'NEWSHRUNK, adj. [sinew and shrunken.]

A horse is said to be sinewshrunken when he has been over-riden, and so fatigued that he becomes gaunt-bellied, by a stiffness and contraction of the two sinews which are under his belly. Farrier's Dict.

SI'NEWY, adj. [from sinew.]

1. Consisting of a sinew; nervous. The nerves and sinews are in poetry often confounded, from nervus, Latin, which signifies a sinew.

The sinewy thread my brain lets fall
Through every part,
Can tie those parts, and make me one of all. Donne.

2. Strong; nervous; vigorous; forcible.

And for thy vigour,
Bull-bearing Milo his addition yields
To sinewy Ajax. Shakspeare.

Worthy fellows, and like to prove Most sinewy swordsmen. Shakspeare.

The northern people are large, fair-complexioned, strong, sinewy, and courageous. Hale.

Fainting, as he reach'd the shore,
He dropt his sinewy arms: his knees no more

SI'NFUL, adj. [sin and full.]

1. Alien from God; not holy; unfanc-tified.

Drive out the sinful pair,
From hallow'd ground th' unholy. Milton.

2. Wicked; not observant of religion; contrary to religion. It is used both of persons and things.

Thrice happy man, said then the father grave,
Whose staggering steps thy steady hand doth lead,
And shews the way his sinful soul to save,
Who better can the way to heaven arad. Fairy Qu.
Nature herself, though pure of sinful thought,
Wrought in her so, that, seeing me, she turn'd. Milton.

The stoicks looked upon all passions as sinful defects and irregularities, as so many deviations from right reason, making passion to be only another word for perturbation. South.

SI'NFULLY, adv. [from sinful.] Wickedly; not piously; not according to the ordinance of God.

All this from my remembrance brutish wrath
Sinfully pluck'd, and not a man of you
Had so much grace to put it in my mind. Shakspeare.

The humble and contented man pleases himself innocently and easily, while the ambitious man attempts to please others sinfully and difficulty, and perhaps unsuccessfully too. South.

SI'NFULNESS, n. f. [from sinful.] Alienation from God; neglect or violation of the duties of religion; contrariety to religious goodness.

I am sent

To shew thee what shall come in future days
To thee, and to thy offspring: good with bad Expect to hear; supernal grace contending With sinfulness of men. Milton.

Peevishness, the general fault of sick persons, is equally to be avoided for the folly and sinfulness. Wake.

To SING, v. n. preterit I sang or sung;
participle pass. sung. [ingan, Saxon;
singia, Islandick; singhen, Dutch.]

1. To form the voice to melody; to articulate musically.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing:
To his musick plants and flowers
Ever sprung, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring. Shakspeare.
Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And some for sorrow sung. Shakspeare.

They rather had beheld Diffentious numbers peffering streets, than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going
About their functions friendly. Shakspeare.
The morning stars sang together. Job.
Then shall the trees of the wood sing out at the presence of the Lord. 1 Chronicles.

Their airy limbs in sports they exercise,
Some in heroick verse divinely sing. Dryden.

2. To utter sweet sounds inarticulately.

The time of the singing of birds is come. Canticles.
You will sooner bind a bird from singing than from flying. Bacon.

Join voices, all ye birds,
That singing up to heaven's gate ascend. Milton.
And parrots, imitating human tongue,
And singing birds, in silver cages hung. Dryden.
Oh! were I made, by some transforming pow'r,
The captive bird that sings within thy bow'r,
Then might my voice thy list'ning ears employ,
And I those kisses he receives enjoy. Pope.

3. To make any small or shrill noise.

A man may hear this shower sing in the wind. Shakspeare.

You leaden messengers,
Fly with false aim; pierce the still moving air,
That sings with piercing; do not touch my lord. Shakspeare.

We hear this fearful tempest sing. Shakspeare.

O'er his head the flying spear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope.

4. To tell in poetry.

Bid her exalt her melancholy wing,
And rais'd from earth, and sav'd from passion, sing
Of human hope by cross event destroy'd,
Of useless wealth, and greatness unenjoy'd. Prior.

To SING, v. a.

1. To relate or mention in poetry.

All the prophets in their age the times
Of great Messiah sing. Milton.

I sing the man who Judah's sceptre bore
In that right hand which held the crook before. Cowley.

Arms and the man I sing. Dryden.

Well might he sing the day he could not fear,
And paint the glories he was sure to wear. Smith.

2. To celebrate; to give praises to, in verse.

The last, the happiest British king,
Whom thou shalt paint or I shall sing. Addison.

3. To utter harmoniously.

Incles, caddisses, cambricks, lawns, why he sings them over as they were gods and goddesses. Shakspeare.

They that waited us required of us mirth, saying,
Sing us one of the songs of Zion. Psalms.

How could we to his godhead sing
For'd hallelujahs? Milton.

Whose beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire. Shakspeare.

Drake, in the vaunting stile of a soldier, would call this enterprize the singing of the king of Spain's beard. Bacon.

That neither was singed in the combustion of Phaëton, nor overwhelmed by the inundation of Deucalion. Brown.

They have a singed bottom all involv'd
With stench and smoke. Milton.

I singe the toes of an ape through a burning glass, and he never would endure it after. L'Estrange.

Thus riding on his curls, he seem'd to pals
A rolling fire along, and singe the grafs. Dryden.

SI'NGER, n. f. [from sing.] One that sings; one whose profession or business is to sing.

His filching was like an unskilful singer, he kept not time. Shakspeare.

I gat me men singers and women singers, and the delights of the sons of men. Ecclesiastes.

To the chief singer on my stringed instruments. Habakkuk.

Cockbirds amongst singing birds are ever the better singers, because they are more lively. Bacon.

Thy heart no ruder than the rugged stone,
I might, like Orpheus, with my num'rous moan
Melt to compassion: now my trait'rous song
With thee conspires to do the singer wrong. Waller.

The birds know how to chafe their fare;
To peck this fruit they all forbear:

Those cheerful singers know not why
They should make any haste to die. Waller.

The Grecian tragedy was at first nothing but a chorus of singers. Dryden.

SI'NGINGMASTER, n. f. [sing and master.]

One who teaches to sing.

He employed an itinerant singingmaster to instruct them rightly in the tunes of the psalms. Addison.

SINGLE, adj. [singulus, Latin.]

1. One; not double; not more than one.

The words are clear and easy, and their originals are of single signification without any ambiguity. South.

Some were single acts, though each complete;
But ev'ry act stood ready to repeat. Dryden.

Then Theseus join'd with bold Pirithous came,
A single concord in a double name. Dryden.

High Alba,
A lonely desert, and an empty land,
Shall scarce afford, for needful hours of rest,
A single house to their benighted guest. Addison.

Where the poetry or oratory shines, a single reading is not sufficient to satisfy a mind that has a true taste; nor can we make the fullest improvement of them without proper reviews. Watts.

2. Particular; individual.

As no single man is born with a right of controul-ing the opinions of all the rest, so the world has no title to demand the whole time of any particular person. Pope.

If one single word were to express but one simple idea, and nothing else, there would be scarce any mistake. Watts.

3. Not compounded.

As simple ideas are opposed to complex, and single ideas to compound, so propositions are distinguished:

S I N

the English tongue has some advantage above the learned languages, which have no usual word to distinguish single from simple. Watts.

4. Alone; having no companion; having no assistant.

Servant of God, well hast thou fought
The better fight, who single hast maintain'd Against revolted multitudes the cause of truth. Milton.

His wisdom such,
Three kingdoms wonder, and three kingdoms fear,
Whilst single he stood forth. Denham.

In sweet possession of the fairy place,
Single, and conscious to myself alone
Of pleasures to th' excluded world unknown. Dryden.

5. Unmarried.

Is the single man therefore blessed? no: as a walled town is more worthier than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honourable than the bare brow of a bachelor. Shakspeare.
Pygmalion

Abhor'd all womankind, but most a wife;
So single chose to live, and shunn'd to wed,
Well pleas'd to want a consort of his bed. Dryden.

6. Not complicated; not duplicated.

To make flowers double, is effected by often removing them into new earth; as, on the contrary, double flowers, by neglecting and not removing, prove single. Bacon.

7. Pure; uncorrupt; not double-minded; simple. A scriptural sense.

The light of the body is the eye: if thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. Matthew.

8. That in which one is opposed to one.

He, when his country, threaten'd with alarms,
Shall more than once the Punick bands affright,
Shall kill the Gaulish king in single fight. Dryden.

To SINGLE, v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To choose out from among others.

I saw him in the battle range about,
And how he single Clifford forth. Shakspeare.

Every man may have a peculiar favour, which, although not perceptible unto man, is yet sensible unto dogs, who hereby can single out their master in the dark. Bacon.

Dost thou already single me? I thought Gyves and the mill had tam'd thee. Milton.

Begin, auspicious boy, to cast about Thy infant eyes, and with a smile thy mother single out. Dryden.

Single the lowliest of the am'rous youth;
Ask for his vows, but hope not for his truth. Prior.

2. To sequester; to withdraw.

Yea simply, faith Basil, and universally, whether it be in works of nature, or of voluntary choice, I see not any thing done as it should be, if it be wrought by an agent singling itself from comforts. Hooker.

3. To take alone.

Many men there are, than whom nothing is more commendable when they are singled; and yet, in society with others, none less fit to answer the duties which are looked for at their hands. Hooker.

4. To separate.

Hardly they herd, which by good hunters singled are. Sidney.

SINGLENESS, n. s. [from single.]

1. Not duplicity or multiplicity; the state of being only one.

2. Simplicity; sincerity; honest plainness. It is not the deepness of their knowledge, but the singleness of their belief, which God accepteth. Hooker.

Men must be obliged to go through their business with singleness of heart. Law.

SINGLY, adv. [from single.]

1. Individually; particularly. If the injured person be not righted, every one of them is wholly guilty of the injustice, and therefore bound to restitution singly and entirely. Taylor.

They tend to the perfection of human nature, and to make men singly and personally good, or tend to the happiness of society. Tillotson.

S I N

2. Only; by himself.

Look thee, 'tis so; thou singly honest man,
Here take: the gods out of my misery
Have sent thee treasure. Shakspeare.

3. Without partners or associates.

Belinda
Burns to encounter two advent'rous knights,
At ombre singly to decide their doom. Pope.

4. Honestly; simply; sincerely.

SINGULAR, adj. [singulier, Fr. singularis, Latin.]

1. Single; not complex; not compound.

That idea which represents one particular determinate thing, is called a singular idea, whether simple, complex, or compound. Watts.

2. [In grammar.] Expressing only one; not plural.

If St. Paul's speaking of himself in the first person singular has so various meanings, his use of the first person plural has a greater latitude. Locke.

3. Particular; unexampled.

So singular a sadness
Must have a cause as strange as the effect. Denham.
Doubtless, if you are innocent, your case is extremely hard, yet it is not singular. Female Quixote.

4. Having something not common to others. It is commonly used in a sense of disapprobation, whether applied to persons or things.

His zeal
None seconded, as singular and rash. Milton.

It is very commendable to be singular in any excellency, and religion is the greatest excellency: to be singular in any thing that is wise and worthy, is not a disparagement, but a praise. Tillotson.

5. Alone; that of which there is but one.

These busts of the emperors and empresses are all very scarce, and some of them almost singular in their kind. Addison.

SINGULARITY, n. s. [singularité, Fr. from singular.]

1. Some character or quality by which one is distinguished from all, or from most others.

Pliny addeth this singularity to that soil, that the second year the very falling down of the seeds yieldeth corn. Raleigh.

2. Any thing remarkable; a curiosity; uncommon character or form.

Your gallery
Have we pass'd through, not without much content
In many singularities; but we saw not
That which my daughter came to look upon,
The statue of her mother. Shakspeare.

I took notice of this little figure for the singularity of the instrument: it is not unlike a violin. Addison.

3. Particular privilege or prerogative.

St. Gregory, being himself a bishop of Rome, and writing against the title of universal bishop, saith thus: None of all my predecessors ever consented to use this ungodly title; no bishop of Rome every took upon him this name of singularity. Hooker.

Catholicism, which is here attributed unto the church, must be understood in opposition to the legal singularity of the Jewish nation. Pearson.

4. Character or manners different from those of others.

The spirit of singularity in a few ought to give place to public judgment. Hooker.

Though, according to the practice of the world, it be singular for men thoroughly to live up to the principles of their religion, yet singularity in this matter is a singular commendation of it. Tillotson.

Singularity in sin puts it out of fashion, since to be alone in any practice seems to make the judgment of the world against it; but the concurrence of others is a tacit approbation of that in which they concur. South.

To SINGULARIZE, v. a. [se singulariser, Fr. from singular.] To make single.

SINGULARLY, adv. [from singular.] Particularly; in a manner not common to others.

S I N

Solitude and singularity can neither daunt nor disgrace him, unless we could suppose it a disgrace to be singularly good. South.

SINGULT, n. s. [singultus, Lat.] A sigh. Spenser.

SINISTER, adj. [sinister, Latin.]

1. Being on the left hand; left; not right; not dexter. It seems to be used with the accent on the second syllable, at least in the primitive, and on the first in the figurative sense.

My mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bounds in my fire's. Shakspeare.

Captain Spurio, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek. Shakspeare.
But a rib,

Crooked by nature, bent, as now appears,
More to the part sinister from me drawn. Milton.

The spleen is unjustly introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, being dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate it. Brown.

In his sinister hand, instead of ball,
He plac'd a mighty mug of potent ale. Dryden.

2. Bad; perverse; corrupt; deviating from honesty; unfair.

Is it so strange a matter to find a good thing furthered by ill men of a sinister intent and purpose, whose forwardness is not therefore a bridle to such as favour the same cause with a better and sincere meaning? Hooker.

The duke of Clarence was soon after by sinister means made clean away. Spenser.

When are there more unworthy men chosen to offices, when is there more strife and contention about elections, or when do partial and sinister affections more utter themselves, than when an election is committed to many? Whitgift.

He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice. Shakspeare.

Those may be accounted the left hands of courts; persons that are full of nimble and sinister tricks and shifts, whereby they pervert the plain courses of courts, and bring justice into oblique lines and labyrinths. Bacon.

The just person has given the world an assurance, by the constant tenor of his practice, that he makes a conscience of his ways, and that he scorns to undermine another's interest by any sinister or inferior arts. South.

3. [sinistre, Fr.] Unlucky; inauspicious. The accent is here on the second syllable.

Tempt it again; that is thy act, or none:
What all the several ills that visit earth,
Brought forth by night with a sinister birth, Plagues, famine, fire, could not reach unto,
The sword, nor surfeits, let thy fury do. Ben Jonson.

SINISTROUS, adj. [sinister, Lat.] Absurd; perverse; wrong-headed: in French, gauche.

A knave or fool can do no harm, even by the most sinistrous and absurd choice. Bentley.

SINISTROUSLY, adv. [from sinistrous.]

1. With a tendency to the left. Many in their infancy are sinistrously disposed, and divers continue all their life left-handed, and have but weak and imperfect use of the right. Brown.

2. Perversely; absurdly.

To SINK, v. n. pret. I sunk, anciently sank; part. sunk or sunken. [Fencan, Saxon; senken, German.]

1. To fall down through any medium; not to swim; to go to the bottom.

As rich with prize,
As is the oozy bottom of the sea
With sunken wreck and sumless treasures. Shakspeare.

In with the river sunk, and with it rose Satan, involv'd in rising mist; then sought
Where to lie hid. Milton.

He swims, or sinks, or wades, or creeps, or flies. Milton.

S I N

The pirate sinks with his ill-gotten gains,
And nothing to another's use remains. Dryden.
Supposing several in a tempest will rather perish than work, would it not be madness in the rest to chuse to sink together, rather than do more than their share? Addison.

2. To fall gradually.

The arrow went out at his heart, and he sunk down in his chariot. 2 Kings.

3. To enter or penetrate into any body.

David took a stone and flung it, and smote the Philistine, that the stone sunk into his forehead.
1 Samuel.

4. To lose height; to fall to a level.

In vain has nature form'd
Mountains and oceans to oppose his passage;
He bounds o'er all, victorious in his march,
The Alps and Pyreneans sink before him. Addison.

5. To lose or want prominence.

What were his marks?—A lean cheek, a blue eye and sunken. Shakspeare.
Deep-dinted wrinkles on her cheeks she draws;
Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws.
Dryden.

6. To be overwhelmed or depressed.

Our country sinks beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds, and each new day a gash
Is added to her wounds. Shakspeare.
They arraign'd shall sink
Beneath thy sentence. Milton.

But if you this ambitious pray'r deny,
Then let me sink beneath proud Arcite's arms;
And, I once dead, let him possess her charms.
Dryden.

7. To be received; to be impressed.

Let these sayings sink down into your ears. Luke.
Truth never sinks into these men's minds, nor gives any tincture to them. Locke.

8. To decline; to decrease; to decay.

Then down the precipice of time it goes,
And sinks in minutes which in ages rose. Dryden.
This republic has been much more powerful than it is at present, as it is still likelier to sink than increase in its dominions. Addison.
Let not the fire sink or slacken, but increase.
Mortimer.

9. To fall into rest or indolence.

Wouldst thou have me sink away
In pleasing dreams, and lose myself in love,
When every moment Cato's life's at stake? Addison.

10. To fall into any state worse than the former.

Nor urg'd the labours of my lord in vain,
A sinking empire longer to sustain. Dryden.

To SINK. v. a.

1. To put under water; to disable from swimming or floating.

A small fleet of English made an hostile invasion or incursion upon their havens and roads, and fired, sunk, and carried away ten thousand ton of their great shipping. Bacon.

2. To delve; to make by delving.

At Saga in Germany they dig up iron in the fields by sinking ditches two feet deep, and in the space of ten years the ditches are digged again for iron since produced. Boyle.

Near Geneva are quarries of freestone, that run under the lake: when the water is at lowest, they make within the borders of it a little square, inclosed within four walls: in this square they sink a pit, and dig for freestone. Addison.

3. To depress; to degrade.

A mighty king I am, an earthly god;
I raise or sink, imprison, or set free;
And life or death depends on my decree. Prior.
Trifling painters or sculptors bestow infinite pains upon the most insignificant parts of a figure, till they sink the grandeur of the whole. Pope.

4. To plunge into destruction.

Heav'n bear witness,
And, if I have a conscience, let it sink me,
Ev'n as the ax falls, if I be not faithful. Shakspeare.

5. To make to fall.

These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some before standing, and undermine others, sinking them into the abyss.
Woodward.

6. To bring low; to diminish in quantity.

When on the banks of an unlook'd-for stream,
You sunk the river with repeated draughts,
Who was the last in all your host that thirsted?
Addison.

7. To crush; to overbear; to depress.

That Nector was in certainty of death, and depressed with the conscience of an ill cause: if you will not grant the first of these will sink the spirit of a hero, you'll at least allow the second may. Pope.

8. To diminish; to degrade.

They catch at all opportunities of ruining our trade, and sinking the figure which we make.
Addison.

I mean not that we should sink our figure out of covetousness; and deny ourselves the proper conveniences of our station, only that we may lay up a superfluous treasure. Rogers.

9. To make to decline.

Thy cruel and unnatural lust of power
Has sunk thy father more than all his years,
And made him wither in a green old age. Rowe.

To labour for a sunk corrupted state. Lyttleton.

10. To suppress; to conceal; to intervert.

If sent with ready money to buy any thing, and you happen to be out of pocket, sink the money, and take up the goods on account. Swift.

SINK. n. s. [rinc, Saxon.]

1. A drain; a jakes.

Should by the cormorant belly be restrain'd,
Who is the sink o' th' body. Shakspeare.
Bad humours gather to a bile; or, as divers kennels flow to one sink, so in short time their numbers increased. Hayward.

Gather more filth than any sink in town. Granv.
Returning home at night, you'll find the sink
Strike your offended sense with double stink. Swift.

2. Any place where corruption is gathered.

What sink of monsters, wretches of lost minds,
Mad after change, and desperate in their states,
Wearied and gall'd with their necessities,
Durst have thought it? Ben Jonson.
Our soul, whose country's heav'n, and God her father,

Into this world, corruption's sink, is sent;
Yet so much in her travail she doth gather,
That she returns home wiser than she went. Donne.

SINLESS. adj. [from sin.] Exempt from sin.

Led on, yet sinless, with desire to know What nearer might concern him. Milton.
At that tasted fruit

The sun, as from Thyestean banquet, turn'd
His course intended; else how had the world
Inhabited, though sinless, more than now Avoided pinching cold, and scorching heat? Milton.

Infernal ghosts and hellish furies round Environ'd thee; some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd,

Some bent at thee their fiery darts, while thou Satt'st unappal'd in calm and sinless peace. Milton.
No thoughts like mine his sinless soul profane, Observant of the right. Dryden.

Did God, indeed, insist on a sinless and unerring observance of all this multiplicity of duties; had the Christian dispensation provided no remedy for our lapses, we might cry out with Balaam, Alas!
who should live, if God did this? Rogers.

SINLESSNESS. n. s. [from sinless.] Exemption from sin.

We may the less admire at his gracious conde-scensions to those, the sinlessness of whose condition will keep them from turning his vouchsafements into any thing but occasions of joy and gratitude. Boyle.

SINNER. n. s. [from sin.]

1. One at enmity with God; one not truly or religiously good.

Let the boldest sinner take this one consideration along with him, when he is going to sin, that whether the sin he is about to act ever comes to be pardoned or no, yet, as soon as it is acted, it quite turns the balance, puts his salvation upon the venture, and makes it ten to one odds against him. South.

Never consider yourselves as persons that are to be seen, admired, and courted by men; but as poor sinners, that are to save yourselves from the vanities and follies of a miserable world, by humility, devotion, and self-denial. Larv.

S I P

2. An offender; a criminal.

Here's that which is too weak to be a sinner, honest water, which ne'er left man i' th' mire.
Shakspeare.

Over the guilty then the fury shakes
The sounding whip, and brandishes her snakes,
And the pale sinner with her sisters takes. Dryden.
Thither, where sinners may have rest, I go,
Where flames refin'd in breasts seraphick glow.
Pope.

Whether the charmer sinner it or saint it,
If folly grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.

SINOFFERING. n. s. [sin and offering.]

An expiation or sacrifice of sin.

The flesh of the bullock shalt thou burn without the camp: it is a sinoffering. Exodus.

SINOPER or Sinople. n. s. [terra pontica, Latin.] A species of earth; ruddle.

Ainsworth.

To SINUATE. v. a. [sinuo, Latin.] To bend in and out.

Another was very perfect, somewhat less with the margin, and more sinuated. Woodward.

SINUATION. n. s. [from sinuate.] A bending in and out.

The human brain is, in proportion to the body, much larger than the brains of brutes, in proportion to their bodies, and fuller of anfractus, or sinuations.
Hale.

SINUOSITY. n. s. [from sinuous.] The quality of being sinuous.

SINUOUS. adj. [sinueux, French; from sinus, Latin.] Bending in and out.

Try with what disadvantage the voice will be carried in an horn, which is a line arched; or in a trumpet, which is a line retorted; or in some pipe that were sinuous. Bacon.

These, as a line, their long dimension drew,
Streaking the ground with sinuous trace. Milton.

In the dissections of horses, in the concave or sinuous part of the liver, whereat the gall is usually seated in quadrupeds, I discover an hollow, long, membranous substance. Brown.

SINUS. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A bay of the sea; an opening of the land.

Plato supposeth his Atlantis to have sunk all into the sea: whether that be true or no, I do not think it impossible that some arms of the sea, or sinuses, might have had such an original. Burnet.

2. Any fold or opening.

To SIP. v. a. [ripan, Saxon; sippen, Dutch.]

1. To drink by small draughts; to take, at one apposition of the cup to the mouth, no more than the mouth will contain.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And sip with nymphs their elemental tea. Pope.

2. To drink in small quantities.

Find out the peaceful hermitage;
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of ev'ry star that heav'n doth shew,
And every herb that sips the dew. Milton.

3. To drink out of.

The winged nation o'er the forest flies:
Then stooping on the meads and leafy bow'rs,
They skim the floods, and sip the purple flow'rs.
Dryden.

To SIP. v. n. To drink a small quantity.

She rais'd it to her mouth with sober grace;
Then sipping, offered to the next. Dryden.

SIP. n. s. [from the verb.] A small draught; as much as the mouth will hold.

Her face o' fire
With labour, and the thing she took to quench it
She would to each one sip. Shakspeare.
One sip of this
Will bathe the drooping spirits in delight,
Beyond the bliss of dreams. Milton.

SIPHON. n. f. [σῖφων; sipho, Lat. siphon, French.] A pipe through which liquors are conveyed.

Beneath th' incessant weeping of these drains
I see the rocky siphons stretch'd immense,
The mighty reservoirs of harden'd chalk,
Of stiff compacted clay. Thomson.

SIPPER. n. f. [from sip.] One that sips.

SIPPET. n. f. [sop, sip, sippet.] A small sop.

SIR. n. f. [sire, French; signior, Italian; senor, Spanish; senior, Latin.]

1. The word of respect in compellation.

Speak on, sir,
I dare your worst objections: if I blush,
It is to see a nobleman want manners. Shakspeare.
But, sir, be sudden in the execution;
Withal obdurate; do not let him plead. Shakspeare.
Sir king,

This man is better than the man he slew. Shakspeare.
At a banquet the ambassador desired the wife men to deliver every one of them some sentence or parable, that he might report to his king, which they did:
only one was silent, which the ambassador perceiving, said to him, Sir, let it not displease you; why do not you say somewhat that I may report? He answered, Report to your lord, that there are that can hold their peace. Bacon.

2. The title of a knight or baronet. This word was anciently so much held essential, that the Jews in their addresses expressed it in Hebrew characters.

Sir Horace Vere, his brother, was the principal in the active part. Bacon.
The court forsakes him, and sir Balaam hangs. Pope.

3. It is sometimes used for man.

I have adventur'd
To try your taking of a false report, which hath Honour'd with confirmation your great judgment,
In the election of a sir so rare. Shakspeare.

4. A title given to the loin of beef, which one of our knigs knighted in a fit of good humour.

He lost his roast-beef stomach, not being able to touch a sir-loin which was served up. Addison.
And the strong table groans Beneath the smoaking sir-loin, stretch'd immense
From side to side. Thomson.
It would be ridiculous, indeed, if a spit, which is strong enough to turn a sir-loin of beef, should not be able to turn a lark. Swift.

SIRE. n. f. [sire, French; senior, Latin.]

1. A father. Used in poetry.

He, but a duke, would have his son a king,
And raise his issue like a loving sire. Shakspeare.
A virgin is his mother, but his sire
The pow'r of the most High. Milton.
And now I leave the true and just supports
Of legal princes and of honest courts,
Whose sires, great part'ners in my father's cares,
Saluted their young king at Hebron crown'd. Prior.
Whether his hoary sire he spies,
While thousand grateful thoughts arise,
Or meets his spouse's fonder eye. Pope.

2. It is used in common speech of beasts: as, the horse had a good sire, but a bad dam.

3. It is used in composition: as, grand*sire*, greatgrand*sire*.

To SIRE. v. a. To beget; to produce.
Cowards father cowards, and base things sire the base. Shakspeare.

SIREN. n. f. [Latin.] A goddess who enticed men by singing, and devoured them; any mischievous alluring woman.

Oh train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note,
To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears;
Sing, siren, to thyself, and I will dote;
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie. Shakspeare.

SIRIASIS. n. f. [συναρισ.] An inflammation of the brain and its membrane, through an excessive heat of the sun.

S I S

Diarr.

SIRIUS. n. f. [Latin.] The dogstar.

SIROCCO. n. f. [Italian; syrus ventus, Latin.] The southeast or Syrian wind.

Forth rush the levant and the ponent winds,
Eurus and Zephyr, with their lateral noise, Sirocco and Libeccio. Milton.

SIRRAH. n. f. [sir, ba! Minsbew.] A compellation of reproach and insult.

Go, sirrah, to my cell;
Take with you your companions: as you look
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely. Shakspeare.
Sirrah, There's no room for faith, troth, or honesty in this bosom of thine. Shakspeare.
It runs in the blood of your whole race, sirrah, to hate our family. L'Estrange.
Guests how the goddess greets her son,
Come hither, sirrah; no, begone. Prior.

SIRUP. } n. f. [Arabick.] The juice SIRUP. } of vegetables boiled with fugar.

Shall I, whose ears her mournful words did seize,
Her words in sirup laid of sweetest breath, Relent. Sidney.

Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowly sirups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep,
Which thou owed'st yesterday. Shakspeare.
And first, behold this cordial julap here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds,
With spirits of balm, and fragrant syrups mixt. Milton.

Those expressed juices contain the true essential salt of the plant; for if they be boiled into the consistence of a sirup, and set in a cool place, the essential salt of the plant will shoot upon the sides of the vessels. Arbuthnot.

SIRUPED. adj. [from sirup.] Sweet, like sirup; bedew'd with sweets.

Yet when there haps a honey fall,
We'll lick the syrup leaves:
And tell the bees that theirs is gall. Drayton.

SIRUPY. adj. [from sirup.] Resembling sirup.

Apples are of a sirupy tenacious nature. Mortimer.

SISE. n. f. [contracted from affize.]

You said, if I return'd next sise in Lent,
I should be in remitter of your grace. Donne.

SISKIN. n. f. [chloris, Latin.] A bird;
a greenfinch.

SISTER. n. f. [γρεορτερ, Saxon; zuster, Dutch.]

1. A woman born of the same parents; correlative to brother.

Her sister began to scold. Shakspeare.
I have said to corruption, thou art my father: to the worm, thou art my mother and my sister. Job.

2. Woman of the same faith; a christian;
one of the same nature; human being.

If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of food, and you say unto them, Depart in peace, be you warmed and filled; notwithstanding, you give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? James.

3. A female of the same kind.

He chid the sisters,
And bade them speak to him. Shakspeare.

4. One of the same kind; one of the same condition.

The women, who would rather wrest the laws
Than let a sister-plaintiff lose the cause,
As judges on the bench more gracious are,
And more attent to brothers of the bar,
Cried, one and all, the suppliant should have right;
And to the grandame hag adjudg'd the knight. Dryden.

There grew two olives, closest of the grove,
With roots intwin'd, and branches interwove;
Alike their leaves, but not alike they smil'd
With sister-fruits: one fertile, one was wild. Pope.

S I T

SISTER in Law. n. f. A husband or wife's sister.

Thy sister in law is gone back unto her people;
return thou after thy sister in law. Ruth.

SISTERHOOD. n. f. [from sister.]

1. The office or duty of a sister.

She abhor'd
Her proper blood, and left to do the part Of sisterhood, to do that of a wife. Daniel.

2. A set of sisters.

3. A number of women of the same order.

I speak,
Wishing a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of Saint Clare. Shakspeare.

A woman who flourishes in her innocence, amidst that spite and rancour which prevails among her exasperated sisterhood, appears more amiable. Addison.

SISTERLY. adj. [from sister.] Like a sister; becoming a sister.

After much debatement,
My sisterly remorse confutes mine honour,
And I did yield to him. Shakspeare.

To SIT. v. n. preterit I sat. [sitan, Go-thick; rittan, Saxon; setten, Dutch.]

1. To rest upon the buttocks.

Their wives do sit beside them, carding wool. May's Virgil.

Aloft, in awful state,
The godlike hero sat
On his imperial throne. Dryden.

2. To perch.

All new fashions be pleasant to me,
I will have them whether I thrive or thee;
Now I am a frisker, all men on me look,
What should I do but sit cock on the hoop?
What do I care if all the world me fail,
I will have a garment reach to my tail. Bourne.

3. To be in a state of rest, or idleness.

Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here? Numbers.
Why sit we here each other viewing idly. Milt.

4. To be in any local position.

I should be still Plucking the grass, to know were sits the wind:
Peering in maps for ports. Shakspeare.

Those
Appointed to sit there had left their charge. Milton.
The ships are ready, and the wind sits fair. A. Phillips.

5. To rest as a weight or burden.

Your brother's death sits at your heart. Shakspeare.
When God lets loose upon us a sickness, if we fear to die, then the calamity sits heavy on us. Taylor.

To toss and fling, and to be restless, only galls our sores, and makes the burden that is upon us fit more uneasy. Tillotson.

Fear, the last of ills, remain'd behind,
And horror heavy sat on every mind. Dryden.

Our whole endeavours are intent to get rid of the present evil, as the first necessary condition to our happiness. Nothing, as we passionately think, can equal the uneasiness that sits so heavy upon us. Locke.

6. To settle; to abide.

That this new comer, shame,
There sit not and reproach us. Milton.

When Thetis blush'd in purple not her own,
And from her face the breathing winds were blown;
A sudden silence sat upon the sea,
And sweeping oars with struggling urg'd their way. Dryden.

He to the void advanc'd his pace;
Pale horror sat on each Arcadian face. Dryden.

7. To brood; to incubate.

As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days. Jeremiab.

The egg laid, and severed from the body of the hen, hath no more nourishment from the hen; but only a quicken heat when she sitteth. Bacon.

She mistakes a piece of chalk for an egg, and sits upon it in the same manner. Addison.

8. To be adjusted; to be with respect to fitness or unfitness, decorum or indecorum.

This new and gorgeous garment, majesty,
Sits not so easy on me as you think. Shakspeare.
Heav'n knows

By what by-paths and indirect crook'd ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well,
How troublesome it sate upon my head;
To thee it shall descend with better quiet.

Shakspeare.

Your preferring that to all other considerations, does, in the eyes of all men, fit well upon you.

Locke.

9. To be placed in order to be painted.

One is under no more obligation to extol every thing he finds in the author he translates, than a painter is to make every face that sits to him handsome.

Garth.

10. To be in any situation or condition.

As a farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he sit at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well, if he sit at great usury.

Bacon.

Suppose all the church-lands were thrown up to the laity; would the tenants fit easier in their rents than now?

Swift.

11. To be convened, as an assembly of a publick or authoritative kind; to hold a session: as, the parliament sits; the last general council sat at Trent.

12. To be placed at the table.

Whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth?

Luke.

13. To exercise authority.

The judgment shall fit, and take away his dominion.

Daniel.

Asses are ye that fit in judgment.

Judges.

Down to the golden Cheroneese, or where The Persian in Ecbatan sate.

Milton.

One council sits upon life and death, the other is for taxes, and a third for the distributions of justice.

Addison.

Assert, ye fair ones, who in judgment fit,
Your ancient empire over love and wit.

Rowe.

14. To be in any solemn assembly as a member.

Three hundred and twenty men sat in council daily.

1 Maccabees.

15. To SIT down. Down is little more than emphatical.

Go and fit down to meat.

Luke.

When we fit down to our meal, we need not suffer the intrusion of armed uninvited guests.

Decay of Piety.

16. To SIT down. To begin a siege.

Nor would the enemy have sate down before it,
if they had done their business in all other places.

Clarendon.

17. To SIT down. To rest; to cease as satisfied.

Here we cannot fit down, but still proceed in our search, and look higher for a support.

Rogers.

18. To SIT down. To settle; to fix abode.

From besides Tanais, the Goths, Huns, and Getae sat down.

Spenser.

19. To SIT out. To be without engage-ment or employment.

They are glad, rather than fit out, to play very small game, and to make use of arguments, such as will not prove a bare inexpediency.

Bp. Sanderson.

20. To SIT up. To rise from lying to sitting.

He that was dead, sat up, and began to speak.

Luke.

21. To SIT up. To watch; not to go to bed.

Be courtly,
And entertain, and feast, fit up, and revel;
Call all the great, the fair, and spirited dames
Of Rome about thee, and begin a fashion
Of freedom.

Ben Jonson.

Some fit up late at winter-fires, and fit
Their sharp-edg'd tools.

May.

Most children shorten that time by sitting up with the company at night.

Locke.

To SIT. v. a.

1. To keep the seat upon.

Hardly the muse can fit the head-strong horse,
Nor would she, if she could, check his impetuous force.

Prior.

2. [When the reciprocal pronoun follows fit, it seems to be an active verb.] To place on a seat.

The happiest youth viewing his progress through
What perils past, what crosses to ensue,
Would shut the book, and fit him down and die.

Shakspeare.

He came to visit us, and, calling for a chair, sat him down, and we sat down with him.

Bacon.

Thus fenc'd,

But not at rest or ease of mind,
They sat them down to weep.

Milton.

3. To be settled to do business. This is rather neuter.

The court was sat before sir Roger came, but the justices made room for the old knight at the head of them.

Addison.

SITE. n. f. [situs, Lat.]

1. Situation; local position.

The city self he strongly fortifies,
Three sides by site it well defended has. Fairfax.
Manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains, environed the same site and temple.

Bacon.

If we consider the heart in its constituent parts, we shall find nothing singular, but what is in any muscle. 'Tis only the site and posture of their several parts that give it the form and functions of a heart.

Bentley.

Before my view appear'd a structure fair;
Its site uncertain, if on earth or air.

Pope.

2. It is taken by Thomson for posture or situation of a thing, with respect to itself; but improperly.

And leaves the semblance of a lover fix'd
In melancholy site, with head inclin'd,
And love-dejected eyes.

Spring.

SITFAST. n. f. [fit and fast.] A hard knob growing under the saddle. F. Di.

SITH. adv. [sith, Sax.] Since; seeing that. Obsolete.

What ceremony of odours used about the bodies of the dead! after which custom, notwithstanding, sith it was their custom, our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be intombed.

Hooker.

I thank you for this profit, and from hence
I'll love no friend, sith love breeds such offence.

Shakspeare.

SITHE. n. f. [sith, Sax.] This word is very variously written by authors: I have chosen the orthography which is at once most simple and most agreeable to etymology.] The instrument of mowing; a crooked blade joined at right angles to a long pole.

Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live register'd upon our brazen tombs;
And then grace us in the disgrace of death:
When, spite of cormorant devouring time,
Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy
That honour, which shall 'bate his scythe's keen edge,

Shakspeare.

And make us heirs of all eternity.
Time is commonly drawn upon tombs, in gardens, and other places, an old man, bald, winged, with a sithe and an hour-glass.

Peacocks.

There rude impetuous rage does storm and fret;
And there, as matter of this murthering brood,
Swinging a huge sithe, stands impartial death,
With endless business almost out of breath.

Craford.

While the milk-maid singeth blithe,
And the mower whets his sithe.

Milton.

The brazen trumpets kindle rage no more;
But useless lances into sithes shall bend,
And the broad falchion in a ploughshare end.

Pope.

Grav'd o'er their seats the form of time was found,
His scythe revers'd, and both his pinions bound.

Pope.

But, Stella, say what evil tongue
Reports you are no longer young?
That time fits with his scythe to mow
Where erst sat Cupid with his bow?

Swift.

SITHE. n. f. Time. Obsolete.

The foolish man thereat woxe wond'rous blith,
And humbly thanked him a thousand siths.

Spenser.

SITHEENCE. adv. [now contracted to since. See SINCE.] Since; in latter times.

This over-running and wasting of the realm was the beginning of all the other evils which sithence have afflicted that land.

Spenser.

SITNESS. adv. Since.

Spenser.

SITTER. n. f. [from fit.]

1. One that sits.

The Turks are great sitters, and seldom walk;
whereby they sweat less, and need bathing more.

Bacon.

2. A bird that broods.

The oldest hens are reckoned the best sitters;
and the youngest the best layers.

Mortimer.

SITTING. n. f. [from fit.]

1. The posture of sitting on a seat.

2. The act of resting on a seat.

Thou knowest my down-sitting and mine uprising.

Psalms.

3. A time at which one exhibits himself to a painter.

Few good pictures have been finished at one sitting; neither can a good play be produced at a heat.

Dryden.

4. A meeting of an assembly.

I'll write you down;
The which shall point you forth at every sitting.

Shakspeare.

What you must say.
I wish it may be at that sitting concluded, unless the necessity of the time press it.

Bacon.

5. A course of study unintermitted.

For the understanding of any one of St. Paul's epistles, I read it all through at one sitting.

Locke.

6. A time for which one sits, as at play, or work, or a visit.

What more than madness reigns,
When one short sitting many hundreds drains!

Dryden.

And not enough is left him to supply
Board-wages, or a footman's livery.

Dryden.

7. Incubation.

Whilst the hen is covering her eggs, the male bird takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough, and amuses her with his songs during the whole time of her sitting.

Addison.

SITUATE. part. adj. [from situs, Lat.]

1. Placed with respect to any thing else.

He was resolved to chuse a war, rather than to have Bretagne carried by France, being so great and opulent a duchy, and situate so opportunely to annoy England.

Bacon.

Within a trading town they long abide,
Full fairly situate on a haven's side.

Dryden.

The eye is a part so artificially composed, and commodiously situate, as nothing can be contrived better for use, ornament, or security.

Ray.

2. Placed; consisting.

Earth hath this variety from heav'n,
Of pleasure situate in hill and dale.

Milton.

SITUATION. n. f. [from situate; situa- tion, French.]

1. Local respect; position.

Prince Cesarini has a palace in a pleasant situation and set off with many beautiful walks.

Addison.

2. Condition; state.

Though this is a situation of the greatest ease and tranquillity in human life, yet this is by no means fit to be the subject of all men's petitions to God.

Rogers.

3. Temporary state; circumstances. Used of persons in a dramatick scene.

SIX. n. f. [six, Fr.] Twice three; one more than five.

No incident in the piece or play but must carry on the main design; all things else are like six fingers to the hand, when nature can do her work with five.

Dryden.

That of six hath many respects in it, not only for the days of the creation, but its natural consideration, as being a perfect number.

Brown.

SIX and seven. n. f. To be at six and seven, is to be in a state of disorder and confusion. A ludicrous expression that has been long in use.

All is uneven,

And every thing is left at six and seven. Shakspeare.

In 1588 there sat in the see of Rome a fierce thundering friar, that would set all at six and seven, or at six and five, if you allude to his name, Bacon.

What blinder bargain ere was driv'n,
Or wager laid at six and seven. Hudibras.

John once turned his mother out of doors, to his great sorrow; for his affairs went on at sixes and sevens. Arbutnot.

The goddess would no longer wait;
But, rising from her chair of state,
Left all below at six and seven,
Harnessed her doves, and flew to heav'n. Swift.

SIXPENCE. n. f. [six and pence.] A coin; half a shilling.

Where have you left the money that I gave you?

Oh!—sixpence that I had. Shakspeare.

The wisest man might blush,

If D—lov'd sixpence more than he, Pope.

SIXSCORE. adj. [six and score.] Six times twenty.

Sixscore and five miles it containeth in circuit.

Sandys.

The crown of Spain hath enlarged the bounds thereof within this last sixscore years, much more than the Ottomans. Bacon.

SIXTEEN. adj. [sixtyne, Sax.] Six and ten.

It returned the voice thirteen times; and I have heard of others that it would return sixteen times.

Bacon.

If men lived but twenty years, we should be satisfied if they died about sixteen or eighteen. Taylor.

SIXTEENTH. adj. [sixteodā, Sax.] The sixth after the tenth; the ordinal of sixteen.

The first lot came forth to Jehoiarib, the sixteenth to Immer. Chronicles.

SIXTH. adj. [sixta, Sax.] The first after the fifth; the ordinal of six.

You are more clement than vile men,

Who of their broken debtors take

A sixth, letting them thrive again. Shakspeare.

There succeeded to the kingdom of England

James the sixth, then king of Scotland. Bacon.

SIXTH. n. f. [from the adjective.] A sixth part.

Only the other half would have been a tolerable seat for rational creatures, and five sixths of the whole globe would have been rendered useless.

Cheyne.

SIXTHLY. adv. [from six.] In the sixth place.

Sixthly, living creatures have more diversity of organs than plants. Bacon.

SIXTIETH. adj. [sixteogōda, Sax.] The tenth six times repeated; the ordinal of sixty.

Let the appearing circle of the fire be three feet diameter, and the time of one entire circulation of it the sixtieth part of a minute, in a whole day there will be but 86,400 such parts. Digby.

SIXTY. adj. [sixtig, Sax.] Six times ten.

When the boats were come within sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, and could go no farther. Bacon.

Of which 7 times 9, or the year 63, is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality.

Brown.

SIZE. n. f. [perhaps rather cise, from incisa, Lat, or from assise, Fr.]

1. Bulk; quantity of superficies; comparative magnitude.

I ever verified my friends,
With all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer. Shakspeare.

If any decayed ship be new made, it is more fit to make her a size less than bigger. Raleigh.

The distance judg'd for shot of every size,
The linstock touch, the pond'rous ball expires. Dryden.

Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote. Locke.

The martial goddess,
Like thee, Telemachus, in voice and size,
With speed divine, from street to street she flies. Pope.

2. [assise, old Fr.] A settled quantity. In the following passage it seems to signify the allowance of the table: whence they say a sizer at Cambridge.

'Tis not in thee
To cut off my train, to scant my sizes,
And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt Against my coming in. Shakspeare.

3. Figurative bulk; condition. This agrees too in the contempt of men of a less size and quality. L'Estrange.

They do not consider the difference between elaborate discourses, delivered to princes or parliaments, and a plain sermon, for the middling or lower size of people. Swift.

4. [fisa, Italian.] Any viscous or glutinous substance.

To SIZE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adjust or arrange according to size.

The foxes weigh the geese they carry,
And, ere they venture on a stream,
Know how to size themselves and them. Hudibras.

Two troops so match'd were never to be found,
Such bodies built for strength, of equal age,
In stature siz'd. Dryden.

2. [from assise.] To settle; to fix.

There was a statute for dispersing the standard of the exchequer throughout England; thereby to size weights and measures. Bacon.

3. To cover with glutinous matter; to besmear with size.

SIZED. adj. [from size.] Having a particular magnitude.

What my love is, proof hath made you know,
And as my love is siz'd, my fear is so. Shakspeare.

That will be a great horse to a Welshman, which is but a small one to a Fleming; having, from the different breed of their countries, taken several sized ideas, to which they compare their great and their little. Locke.

SIZABLE. adj. [from size.] Reasonably bulky; of just proportion to others.

He should be purged, sweated, vomited, and starved, till he come to a sizable bulk. Arbutnot.

SIZER or Servitor. n. f. A certain rank of students in the universities.

They make a scramble for degree;
Masters of all sorts and of all ages,
Keepers, sub-fifers, lackeys, pages. Bishop Corbett.

SIZERS. n. f. See SCISSARS.

A buttrice and pincers, a hammer and a nail,
An apron and sizers for head and for tail. Tusser.

SIZINESS. n. f. [from sizy.] Glutinousness; viscosity.

In rheumatisms, the siziness passes off thick contents in the urine, or glutinous sweats. Floyer.

Cold is capable of producing a siziness and viscosity in the blood. Arbutnot.

SIZY. adj. [from size.] Viscous; glutinous.

The blood is sizy, the alkalescent salts in the serum producing coriaceous concretions. Arbutnot.

SKADDLE. n. f. [scaddnirre, Sax. scath is barm; thence scathle, scaddle.] Hurt; damage. Diſ.

SKADDONS. n. f. The embryos of bees. Bailey.

SKAINSMATE. n. f. [I suppose from skain, or skean, a knife, and mate.] A mesmate. It is remarkable that mes, Dutch, is a knife.

Scurvy knave, I am none of his flirt gills;
I am none of his skainsmates. Shakspeare.

SKATE. n. f. [ſceadda, Sax.]

1. A flat sea fish.
2. A sort of shoe armed with iron, for sliding on the ice.

They sweep

On sounding skates a thousand different ways,
In circling poise swift as the winds. Thomson.

SKEAN. n. f. [Irish and Erse; ſagene, Sax.] A short sword; a knife.

Any disposed to do mischief may under his mantle privily carry his head piece, skean, or pistol, to be always ready. Spenser.

The Irish did not fail in courage or fierceness, but being only armed with darts and skaines, it was rather an execution than a fight upon them. Bacon.

SKEG. n. f. A wild plum.

SKEGGER. n. f. Little salmon, called skeggerts, are bred of such sick salmon that might not go to the sea; and though they abound, yet never thrive to any bigness. Walton.

SKEIN. n. f. [escaigne, Fr.] A knot of thread or silk wound and doubled.

Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skain of sleigh'd silk, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse? Shakspeare.

Our stile should be like a skain of silk, to be found by the right thread, not ravelled or perplexed. Then all is a knot, a heap. Ben Jonson.

Besides, so lazy a brain as mine is, grows soon weary when it has so entangled a skain as this to unwind. Digby.

SKELETON. n. f. [σκελετος.]

1. [In anatomy.] The bones of the body preserved together as much as can be in their natural situation. Quincy.

When rattling bones together fly,
From the four corners of the sky,
When sinews o'er the skeletons are spread,
Those cloth'd with flesh, and life inspires the dead. Dryden.

Though the patient may from other causes be exceedingly emaciated, and appear as a ghastly skeleton, covered only with a dry skin, yet nothing but the ruin and destruction of the lungs denominates a consumption. Blackmore.

I thought to meet, as late as heav'n might grant,
A skeleton, ferocious, tall, and gaunt,
Whose loose teeth in their naked sockets shook,
And grinn'd terrific, a Sardonian look. Harte.

2. The compages of the principal parts.

The great structure itself, and its great integrals, the heavenly and elementary bodies, are framed in such a position and situation, the great skeleton of the world. Hale.

The schemes of any of the arts or sciences may be analyzed in a sort of skeleton, and represented upon tables, with the various dependencies of their several parts. Watts.

SKELLUM. n. f. [skelm, German.] A villain; a scoundrel. Skinner.

SKEP. n. f. [ſcephen, lower Saxon, to draw.]

1. A sort of basket, narrow at the bottom, and wide at the top, to fetch corn in.

A pitchfork, a doongfork, scave, skip, and a bin. Tusser.

2. In Scotland, the repositories where the bees lay their honey is still called skip.

SKEPTICK. n. f. [σκεπτικος; sceptique, Fr.] One who doubts, or pretends to doubt, of every thing.

Bring the cause unto the bar; whose authority none must disclaim, and least of all those skepticks in religion. Decay of Piety.

Survey

Nature's extended face, then skepticks say,

In this wide field of wonders can you find

No art? Blackmore.

With too much knowledge for the sceptick's side,

With too much weakness for the stoick's pride,

Man hangs between. Pope.

The dogmatist is sure of every thing, and the sceptick believes nothing. Watts.

SKEPTICAL. adj. [from skeptick.] Doubtful; pretending to universal doubt.

May the Father of mercies confirm the sceptical and wavering minds, and so prevent us, that stand fast, in all our doings, and further us with his continual help. Bentley

SKEPTICISM. n. s. [scepticism, French; from skeptick.] Universal doubt; pretence or profession of universal doubt.

I laid by my natural diffidence and scepticism for a while, to take up that dogmatick way. Dryden.

SKETCH. n. s. [schedula, Lat.] An outline; a rough draught; a first draught; a first plan.

I shall not attempt a character of his present majesty, having already given an imperfect sketch of it. Addison.

As the lightest sketch, if justly trac'd,
Is by ill colouring but the more disgrac'd,
So by false learning is good sense defac'd. Pope.

TO SKETCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To draw, by tracing the outline.

If a picture is daubed with many glaring colours, the vulgar eye admires it; whereas he judges very contemptuously of some admirable design sketched out only with a black pencil, though by the hand of Raphael. Watts.

2. To plan, by giving the first or principal notion.

The reader I'll leave in the midst of silence, to contemplate those ideas which I have only sketched, and which every man must finish for himself. Dryden.

SKEWER. n. s. [skere, Danish.] A wooden or iron pin, used to keep meat in form.

Sweetbreads and collops were with skewers prick'd about the sides. Dryden.

I once may overlook

A skewer sent to table by a cook. King.

From his rug the skewer he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes. Swift.

Send up meat well stuck with skewers, to make it look round; and an iron skewer, when rightly employed, will make it look handsomer. Swift.

TO SKEWER. v. a. [from the noun.] To fasten with skewers.

SKIFF. n. s. [esquife, Fr. scapha, Latin.] A small light boat.

If in two skiffs of cork a loadstone and steel be placed within the orb of their activities, the one doth not move, the other standing still; but both steer into each other. Brown.

In a poor skiff he pass'd the bloody main,
Choak'd with the slaughter'd bodies of his train. Dryden.

On Garrway cliffs

A savage race, by shipwreck fed,

Lie waiting for the founder'd skiffs,

And strip the bodies of the dead. Swift.

SKILFUL. adj. [skill and full.] Knowing; qualified with skill; possessing any art; dexterous; able. It is, in the following examples, used with of, at, and in, before the subject of skill. Of seems poetical, at ludicrous, in popular and proper.

His father was a man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold and silver. 2 Chronicles.

They shall call the husbandmen to mourning, and such as are skilful of lamentation, to wailing. Amos.

Will Vafer is skilful at finding out the ridiculous side of a thing, and placing it in a new light. Tatler.

Say, Stella, feel you no content,

Reflecting on a life well spent;

Your skilful hand employ'd to save

Despairing wretches from the grave;

And then supporting with your store

Those whom you dragg'd from death before. Swift.

Instructors should not only be skilful in those sciences which they teach; but have skill in the method of teaching, and patience in the practice. Watts.

SKILFULLY. adv. [from skilful.] With skill; with art; with uncommon ability; dexterously.

As soon as he came near me, in fit distance, with much fury, but with fury skilfully guided, he ran upon me. Sidney.

Ulysses builds a ship with his own hands, as skilfully as a shipwright. Broome.

SKILFULNESS. n. s. [from skilful.] Art; ability; dexterousness.

He fed them according to the integrity of his heart, and guided them by the skilfulness of his hands. Psalms.

SKILL. n. s. [skill, Islandick.]

1. Knowledge of any practice or art; readiness in any practice; knowledge; dexterity; artfulness.

Skill in the weapon is nothing without sack. Shakspeare.

You have

As little skill to fear, as I have purpose

To put you to't. Shakspeare.

Oft nothing profits more Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right,

Well manag'd; of that skill the more thou know'st,

The more she will acknowledge thee her head. Milton.

I will from wond'rous principles ordain

A race unlike the first, and try my skill again. Dryden.

Phocion the Athenian general, then ambassador from the state, by his great wisdom and skill at negotiations, diverted Alexander from the conquest of Athens, and restored the Athenians to his favour. Swift.

2. Any particular art.

Learned in one skill, and in another kind of learning unskilful. Hooker.

TO SKILL. v. n. [skilia, Islandick.]

1. To be knowing in; to be dexterous at: with of.

They that skill not of so heavenly matter,

All that they know not, envy or admire. Spenser.

The overseers were all that could skill of instruments of musick. 2 Chronicles.

One man of wisdom, experience, learning, and direction, may judge better in those things that he can skill of, than ten thousand others that be ignorant. Whitgift.

2. [skilia, Islandick, signifies to distinguish.] To differ; to make difference; to interest; to matter. Not in use.

Whether the commandments of God in scripture be general or special, it skilleth not. Hooker.

What skills it, if a bag of stones or gold

About thy neck do drown thee; raise thy head,

Take stars for money; stars not to be told

By any art; yet to be purchas'd.

None is so wasteful as the scraping dame;

She loseth three for one; her soul, rest, fame. Herbert.

He intending not to make a summer business of it, but a resolute war, without term prefixed, until he had recovered France, it skilled not much when he began the war, especially having Calais at his back where he might winter. Bacon.

SKILLED. adj. [from skill.] Knowing; dexterous; acquainted with: with of poetically, with in popularly.

Of these nor skill'd nor studious. Milton.

Moses in all the Egyptian arts was skill'd,

When heav'nly power that chosen vessel fill'd. Denham.

He must be very little skilled in the world, who thinks that a voluble tongue shall accompany only a good understanding. Locke.

SKILLESS. adj. [from skill.] Wanting skill; artless. Not in use.

Nor have I seen

More that I may call men than you:

How features are abroad I'm skillefs of. Shakspeare.

Jealously what might befall your travel,
Being skillefs in these parts; which to a stranger, Unguided and unfriended, often prove Rough and unhospitable. Shakspeare.

Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,
Mishapen in the conduct of them both,
Like powder in a skillefs soldier's flask
Is set on fire. Shakspeare.

SKILLET. n. s. [escuellette, Fr.] A small kettle or boiler.

When light wing'd toys
Of feather'd Cupid soil with wanton dullness
My speculative and offic'd instruments,
Let house-wives make a skillet of my helm,
And all indign and base adversities
Make head against my estimation. Shakspeare.

Break all the wax, and in a kettle or skillet set it over a soft fire. Mortimer.

SKILT. n. s. [a word used by Cleaveland, of which I know not either the etymology or meaning.]

Smeitymnus! ha! what art?
Syriack? or Arabick? or Welsh? What skilt?
Ape all the bricklayers that Babel built. Cleavel.

TO SKIM. v. a. [properly to scum, from scum; escume, French.]

1. To clear off from the upper part, by passing a vessel a little below the surface.

My coz Tom, or his coz Mary,

Who hold the plough or skim the dairy,

My fav'rite books and pictures sell. Prior.

2. To take by skimming.

She boils in kettles must of wine, and skims

With leaves the dregs that overflow the brims. Dry.

His principal studies were after the works of Titan, whose cream he had skimmed. Dryden.

The surface of the sea is covered with its bubbles,

while it rises, which they skim off into their boats, and afterwards separate in pots. Addison.

Whilome I've seen her skim the clouted cream,

And prefs from spongy curds the milky stream. Gay.

3. To brush the surface slightly; to pass very near the surface.

Nor seeks in air her humble flight to raise,

Content to skim the surface of the seas. Dryden.

The swallow skims the river's wat'ry face. Dryd.

A winged eastern blast just skimming o'er

The ocean's brow, and sinking on the shore. Prior.

4. To cover superficially. Improper.

Perhaps originally skin.

Dang'rous flats in secret ambush lay,

Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land, Dryd.

TO SKIM. v. n. To pass lightly; to glide along.

Thin airy shapes o'er the furrows rise,

A dreadful scene! and skim before his eyes. Addis.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,

The line too labours, and the words move slow;

Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,

Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main. Pope.

Such as have active spirits, who are ever skimming over the surface of things with a volatile spirit, will fix nothing in their memory. Watts.

They skim over a science in a very superficial survey, and never lead their disciples into the depths of it. Watts.

SKIMBLESKAMBLE. adj. [a cant word formed by reduplication from scamble.] Wandering; wild.

A couching lion and a ramping cat,

And such a deal of skimbleskamble stuff,

As puts me from my faith. Shakspeare.

SKIMMER. n. s. [from skim.] A shallow vessel with which the scum is taken off.

Wash your wheat in three or four waters, stirring it round; and with a skimmer, each time, take off the light. Mortimer.

SKIMMILK. n. s. [skim and milk.] Milk from which the cream has been taken.

S K I

Then cheese was brought; says Slouch, this e'en shall roll;
This is skimilk, and therefore it shall go. King.

SKIN. n. f. [skind, Danish.]

1. The natural covering of the flesh. It consists of the cuticle, outward skin, or scarfskin, which is thin and insensible; and the cutis, or inner skin, extremely sensible.

The body is consumed to nothing, the skin feeling rough and dry like leather. Harvey.

The priest on skins of offerings takes his ease,
And nightly visions in his slumber sees. Dryden.

2. Hide; pelt; that which is taken from animals to make parchment or leather.

On whose top he strow'd
A wild goat's shaggy skin; and then bestow'd
His own couch on it. Chapman.

3. The body; the person: in ludicrous speech.

We meet with many of these dangerous civilities, wherein 'tis hard for a man to save both his skin and his credit. L'Estrange.

4. A husk.

To SKIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To flay; to strip or divest of the skin.

The beavers run to the door to make their escape, are there entangled in the nets, seized by the Indians, and immediately skinned. Ellis.

2. To cover with the skin.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakspeare.

Authority, though it err like others,
Has yet a kind of medicine in itself,
That skins the vice o' th' top. Shakspeare.

The wound was skinned; but the strength of his thigh was not restored. Dryden.

It only patches up and skins it over, but reaches not the bottom of the sore. Locke.

The last stage of healing, or skinning over, is called cicatrization. Sharp.

3. To cover superficially.

What I took for solid earth was only heaps of rubbish, skinned over with a covering of vegetables. Addison.

SKI'NFLINT. n. f. [skin and flint.] A niggardly person.

SKINK. n. f. [scenc, Saxon.]

1. Drink; any thing potable.
2. Pottage.

Scotch skink, which is a pottage of strong nourishment, is made with the knees and sinews of beef, but long boiled: jelly also of knuckles of veal. Bacon.

To SKINK. v. n. [scencan, Saxon.] To serve drink. Both noun and verb are wholly obsolete.

SKI'NKER. n. f. [from skink.] One that serves drink.

I give thee this pennyworth of sugar, clapt even now into my hand by an under skinker; one that never spake other English in his life, than eight shillings and six-pence, and you are welcome, sir. Shakspeare.

Hang up all the poor hop-drinkers,
Cries old Sym, the king of skinkers. Ben Jonson.

His mother took the cup the clown had fill'd:
The reconciler bowl went round the board,
Which, emptied, the rude skinker still restor'd. Dryden.

SKI'NNED. adj. [from skin.] Having skin.

When the ulcer becomes foul, and discharges a nasty ichor, the edges in process of time tuck in, and, growing skinned and hard, give it the name of callous. Sharp.

SKI'NNER. n. f. [from skin.] A dealer in skins, or pelts.

SKI'NNINESS. n. f. [from skinny.] The quality of being skinny.

SKI'NNY. adj. [from skin.] Consisting only of skin; wanting flesh.

S K I

Her choppy finger laying Upon her skinny lips. Shakspeare.

Left the asperity of these cartilages of the wind-pipe should hurt the gullet, which is tender, and of a skinny substance, these annular gristles are not made round; but where the gullet touches the wind-pipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way. Ray.

His fingers meet
In skinny films, and shape his oary feet. Addison.

To SKIP. v. n. [squittire, Italian; esquiver, Fr. I know not whether it may not come, as a diminutive, from scape.]

1. To fetch quick bounds; to pass by quick leaps; to bound lightly and joyfully.

Was not Israel a derision unto thee? Was he found among thieves? For since thou spakest of him, thou skippedst for joy. Jeremiah.

The queen, bound with love's powerful 't charm,
Sat with Pigwiggan arm in arm:
Her merry maids, that thought no harm,
About the room were skipping. Drayton.

At spur or switch no more he skipt,
Or mended pace, then Spaniard whipt. Hudibras.

The earth-born race
O'er ev'ry hill and verdant pasture stray,
Skip o'er the lawns, and by the rivers play. Blackm.

John skipped from room to room, ran up stairs and down stairs, peeping into every cranny. Arbut.

Thus each hand promotes the pleasing pain,
And quick sensations skip from vein to vein. Pope.

The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day;
Had he thy reason would he skip and play? Pope.

2. To SKIP over. To pass without notice.

Pope Pius II. was wont to say, that the former popes did wisely to set the lawyers a-work to debate, whether the donation of Constantine the Great to Sylvester of St. Peter's patrimony were good or valid in law or no; the better to skip over the matter in fact, whether there was ever any such thing at all or no. Bacon.

A gentleman made it a rule, in reading, to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. Swift.

To SKIP. v. a. [esquiver, French.]

1. To miss; to pass.

Let not thy sword skip one:
Pity not honour'd age for his white beard;
He is an usurer. Shakspeare.

They who have a mind to see the issue, may skip these two chapters, and proceed to the following. Bunnet.

2. In the following example skip is active or neuter, as over is thought an adverb or preposition.

Although to engage very far in such a metaphysical speculation were unfit, when I only endeavour to explicate fluidity, yet we dare not quite skip it over, lest we be accused of overseeing it. Boyle.

SKIP. n. f. [from the verb.] A light leap or bound.

He looked very curiously upon himself, sometimes fetching a little skip, as if he had said his strength had not yet forsaken him. Sidney.

You will make so large a skip as to cast yourself from the land into the water. More.

SKI'PJACK. n. f. [skip and jack.] An upstart.

The want of shame or brains does not presently entitle every little skipjack to the board's end in the cabinet. L'Estrange.

SKI'PKENNEL. n. f. [skip and kennel.] A lackey; a footboy.

SKI'PPER. n. f. [schipper, Dutch.] A shipmaster or shipboy.

Are you not afraid of being drowned too? No, not I, says the skipper. L'Estrange.

—Yes, refined like a Dutch skipper from a whale fishing. Congreve.

SKI'PPET. n. f. [probably from skip.] A small boat. Not used.

Upon the bank they sitting did espy
A dainty damsel, dressing of her hair,
By whom a little skippet floating did appear. F. Qu.

S K I

SKI'RMISH. n. f. [from ys and carm, Welsh, the shout of war: whence, ysgarm, and ysgarmes, old British words. Maes a narw 'sgarmes a wnan, says an ancient writer. Escarrouche, French.]

1. A slight fight; less than a set battle.
One battle, yes, a skirmish more there was
With adverse fortune fought by Cartismand;
Her subjects most revolt. Philips.

2. A contest; a contention.

There is a kind of merry war betwixt signior Benedick and her: they never meet but there's a skirmish of wit. Shakspeare.

These skirmishes expire not with the first propugners of the opinions: they perhaps began as single duellers; but then they soon have their partisans and abettors, who not only enhance, but entail the feud to posterity. Decay of Piety.

To SKI'RMISH. v. n. [escarmouche, Fr. from the noun.] To fight loosely; to fight in parties before or after the shock of the main battle.

Ready to charge, and to retire at will;
Though broken, scatter'd, fled, they skirmish still. Fairfax.

A gentleman volunteer, skirmishing with the enemy before Worcester, was run through his arm in the middle of the biceps with a sword, and shot with a musket-bullet in the same shoulder. Wiseman.

I'll pass by the little skirmishings on either side. Atterbury.

SKI'RMISHER. n. f. [from skirmish.] He who skirmishes. Ainsworth.

To SKIRRE. v. a. [This word seems to be derived from rein, Saxon, pure, clean; unless it shall be rather deduced from scrupaw.] To scour; to ramble over in order to clear.

Send out more horses, skirre the country round;
Hang those that talk of fear. Shakspeare.

To SKIRRE. v. n. To scour; to feud; to run in haste.

We'll make them skirre away as swift as stones Enforced from the old Assyrian slings. Shakspeare.

SKI'RRET. n. f. [sifarum, Lat.] A plant.

Skirrets are a sort of roots propagated by seed. Mortimer.

SKIRT. n. f. [skierte, Swedish.]

1. The loose edge of a garment; that part which hangs loose below the waist.

It's but a nightgown in respect of yours; cloth of gold and cuts, side sleeves and skirts, round underborne with a bluish tinsel. Shakspeare.

As Samuel turned about to go away, he laid hold upon the skirt of his mantle and it rent. 1 Samuel.

2. The edge of any part of the dress.

A narrow lace, or a small skirt of ruffled linen, which runs along the upper part of the stays before, and crosses the breast, being a part of the tucker, is called the modesty-piece. Addison.

3. Edge; margin; border; extreme part.

He should seat himself at Athie, upon the skirt of that quiet country. Spenser.

Ye mists, that rise
From hill or steaming lake, dusky or grey,
Till the sun paint your fleecy skirts with gold,
In honour to the world's great Author rise. Milton.

Though I fled him angry, yet recall'd
To life prolong'd, and promis'd race, I now Gladly behold, though but his utmost skirts
Of glory, and far off his steps adore. Milton.

The northern skirts that join to Syria have entered into the conquests or commerce of the four great empires; but that which seems to have secured the other is, the stony and sandy deserts, through which no army can pass. Temple.

Upon the skirts
Of Arragon our squander'd troops he rallies. Dryden.

To SKIRT. v. a. [from the noun.] To border; to run along the edge.

Temple skirteth this hundred on the waste side. Carew.

Of all these bounds,
With shadowy forests and with champaigns rich'd,

S K R

With plenteous rivers and wide skirted meads,
We make thee lady. Shakspeare.

The middle pair
Skirted his loins and thighs with downy gold. Milton.

A spacious circuit on the hill there stood,
Level and wide, and skirted round with wood. Aldison.

Dark cypresses the skirting sides adorn'd,
And gloomy eugh-trees, which for ever mourn'd. Harte.

SKI'TTISH. adj. [skye, Danish; schew, Dutch.]

1. Shy; easily frightened.
A restiff skittish jade had gotten a trick of rising, starting, and flying out at her own shadow. L'Esrange.

2. Wanton; volatile; hasty; precipitate.
Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits,
Sets all on hazard. Shakspeare.

He still resoly'd. to mend the matter,
T' adhere and cleave the obstinate;
And, still the skittish and looser
Her freaks, appear'd to fit the closer. Hudibras.

3. Changeable; fickle.
Some men sleep in skittish fortune's hall,
While others play the ideots in her eyes. Shakspeare.
Such as I am, all true lovers are;
Unstaid and skittish in all notions else,
Save in the constant image of the creature
That is below'd. Shakspeare.

SKI'TTISHLY. adv. [from skittish.] Wantonly; uncertainly; fickle.

SKI'TTISHNESS. n. f. [from skittish.] Wantonnefs; fickleness.

SKONCE. n. f. [See SCONCE.]
Reynard ranfacketh every corner of his wily skonce, and bestirreth the utmost of his nimble stumps to quit his coat from their jaws. Carew.

SKREEN. n. f. [screen, escrein, French, which Minsheu derives from secerniculum, Latin. Nimis violenter, ut solet, says Skinner; which may be true as to one of the senses: but if the first sense of screen be a kind of coarse sieve or riddle, it may perhaps come, if not from cribrum, from some of the descendants of cerno.]

1. A riddle or coarse sieve.
A skuttle or skreen to rid soil fro' the corn. Tusser.

2. Any thing by which the sun or weather is kept off.
To cheapen fans, or buy a skreen. Prior.
So long condemn'd to fires and skreens,
You dread the waving of these greens. Anon.

3. Shelter; concealment.
Fenc'd from day by night's eternal skreen;
Unknown to heav'n, and to myself unseen. Dryden.

To SKREEN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To riddle; to sift. A term yet used among masons when they sift sand for mortar.

2. To shade from sun or light, or weather.

3. To keep off light or weather.
The curtains closely drawn, the light to skreen:
Thus cover'd with an artificial night,
Sleep did his office. Dryden.

The waters mounted up into the air: their interposition betwixt the earth and the sun skreen and fence off the heat, otherwise insupportable. Woodward.

4. To shelter; to protect.
Ajax interpos'd
His sevenfold shield, and skreen'd Laertes son,
When the insulting Trojans urg'd him fore. Philips.

He that travels with them is to skreen them, and get them out when they have run themselves into the briars. Locke.

His majesty encouraged his subjects to make mouths at their betters, and afterwards skreened them from punishment. Spectator.

The scales, of which the scarf-skin is composed, are designed to fence the orifices of the secretory ducts of the miliary glands, and to skreen the nerves from external injuries. Cheyne.

S K Y

SKUE. adj. [Of this word there is found no satisfactory derivation.] Oblique; sidelong. It is most used in the adverb askue.

Several have imagined that this skue posture of the axis is a most unfortunate thing; and that if the poles had been erect to the plane of the ecliptick, all mankind would have enjoyed a very paradise. Bentley.

To SKULK. v. n. To hide; to lurk in fear or malice.

Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd behind the fence, and sneak'd away. Dryden.

While publick good aloft in pomp they wield,
And private interest skulks behind the shield. Young.

SKULL. n. f. [skiola, Islandick; skatti, Islandick, a head.]

1. The bone that encloses the head: it is made up of several pieces, which, being joined together, form a considerable cavity, which contains the brain as in a box, and it is proportionate to the bigness of the brain. Quincy.

Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting gems. Shakspeare.
With redoubled strokes he plies his head;
But drives the batter'd skull within the brains. Dryden.

2. [reole, Saxon, a company.] A shoal.
See SCULL.

Repair to the river, where you have seen them swim in skulls or shoals. Walton.

SKULLCAP. n. f. A headpiece.

SKULLCAP. n. f. [caffida, Lat.] A plant.

SKY. n. f. [sky, Danish.]

1. The region which surrounds this earth beyond the atmosphere. It is taken for the whole region without the earth.

The mountains their broad backs upheave
Into the clouds, their tops ascend the sky. Milton.
The maids of Argos, who with frantic cries,
And imitated lowings, fill'd the skies. Roscommon.
Raise all thy winds, with night involve the skies. Dryden.

2. The heavens.

The thunderer's bolt, you know,
Sky planted, batters all rebelling coasts. Shakspeare.
What is this knowledge but the sky stol'n fire,
For which the thief still chain'd in ice doth sit? Davies.

Wide is the fronting gate, and, rais'd on high,
With adamant columns threats the sky. Dryden.

3. The weather; the climate.

Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies. Shakspeare.

We envy not the warmer clime, that lies
In ten degrees of more indulgent skies;
Nor at the coarseness of our heav'n repine,
Though o'er our heads the frozen Pleiads shine. Addison.

SKY'EX. adj. [from sky. Not very elegantly formed.] Ethereal.

A breath thou art,
Servile to all the skyey influences,
That do this habitation, where thou keep'st, Hourly afflict. Shakspeare.

SKY'COLOUR. n. f. [sky and colour.] An azure colour; the colour of the sky.

A solution as clear as water, with only a light touch of sky-colour, but nothing near so high as the ceruleous tincture of silver. Boyle.

SKY'COLOURED. adj. [sky and colour.] Blue; azure; like the sky.

This your Ovid himself has hinted, when he tells us that the blue water-nymphs are dressed in sky-coloured garments. Addison.

SKY'DIED. adj. [sky and die.] Coloured like the sky.

There figs, skydyed, a purple hue disclose. Pope.
SKY'ED. adj. [from sky.] Enveloped by the skies. This is unauthorized and inelegant.

The pale deluge floats
O'er the sky'd mountain to the shadowy vale. Thomson.

SKY'ISH. adj. [from sky.] Coloured by the ether; approaching the sky.

Of this flat a mountain you have made,
T' o'ertop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shakspeare.

SKY'LARK. n. f. [sky and lark.] A lark that mounts and sings.

He next proceeded to the skylark, mounting up by a proper scale of notes, and afterwards falling to the ground with a very easy descent. Spectator.

SKY'LIGHT. n. f. [sky and light.] A window placed in a room, not laterally, but in the cieling.

A monstrous fowl dropped through the sky-light, near his wife's apartment. Arbutnot and Pope.

SKY'ROCKET. n. f. [sky and rocket.] A kind of firework, which flies high, and burns as it flies.

I considered a comet, or, in the language of the vulgar, a blazing star, as a skyrocket discharged by an hand that is almighty. Addison.

SLAB. n. f. Ainsworth.

1. A puddle.

2. A plane of stone: as, a marble slab.

SLAB. adj. [a word, I suppose, of the same original with slabber, or slaver.] Thick; viscous; glutinous.

Nose of Turk, and Tartar's lips;
Finger of birth-strangled babe,
Ditch-deliver'd by a drab;
Make the gruel thick and slab. Shakspeare.

To SLABBER. v. n. [slabben, slabberen, Dutch.]

1. To let the spittle fall from the mouth; to drivel.

2. To shed or pour any thing.

To SLABBER. v. a. [slaver is the word used.]

1. To smear with spittle.
He slabbered me all over, from cheek to cheek,
with his great tongue. Arbutnot.

2. To shed; to spill.
The milk-pan and cream-pot so slabber'd and toft,
That butter is wanting, and cheese is half lost. Tusser.

SLABBERER. n. f. [from slabber.] He who slabbers; an idiot.

SLABBY. adj. [the same with slab.]

1. Thick; viscous. Not used.

In the cure of an ulcer, with a moist intemperies, slabby and greasy medicaments are to be forborn, and drying to be used. Wifeman.

2. Wet; floody: in low language.

When waggish boys the stunted before ply,
To rid the slabby pavements, pass not by. Gay.

SLACK. adj. [slacc, Saxon; slaken, Islandick; ylack, Welsh; laxus, Latin.]

1. Not tense; not hard drawn; loose.

The vein in the arm is that which Aretæus commonly opens; and he gives a particular caution, in this case, to make a slack compression, for fear of exciting a convulsion. Arbutnot.

2. Relaxed; weak; not holding fast.

All his joints relax'd:
From his slack hand the garland wreath'd for Eve
Down dropp'd, and all the faded roses shed. Milton.

3. Remiss; not diligent; not eager; not fervent.

Thus much help and furtherance is more yielded, in that, if so be our zeal and devotion to Godward be slack, the alacrity and fervour of others serveth as a present spur. Hooker.

Seeing his soldiers slack and timorous, he re-proved them of cowardice and treason. Knolles.
Nor were it just, would he resume that shape,
That slack devotion should his thunder 'scape. Waller.

Rebellion now began, for lack Of zeal and plunder, to grow slack. Hudibras.

4. Not violent; not rapid.

Their pace was formal, grave, and slack:
His nimble wit outran the heavy pack. Dryden.

5. Not intense.

A handful of slack dried hops spoil many pounds, by taking away their pleasant smell. Mortimer.

To SLACK.

To SLACKEN. } v. n. [from the adjective.]

1. To be remiss; to neglect.

When thou shalt vow a vow unto the Lord, slack not to pay it. Deuteronomy.

2. To lose the power of cohesion.

The fire, in lime burnt, lies hid, so that it appears to be cold; but water excites it again, whereby it slacks and crumbles into fine powder. Mason.

3. To abate.

Whence these raging fires
Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames. Milton.

4. To languish; to fail; to flag. Ainsw.

To SLACK. } v. a.
To SLACKEN. }

1. To loosen; to make less tight.

Ah! generous youth, that wish forbear;
Slack all thy fails, and fear to come. Dryden.
Had Ajax been employ'd, our slacken'd fails
Had still at Aulis waited happy gales. Dryden.

2. To relax; to remit.

This makes the pulses beat, and lungs respire;
This holds the sinews like a bridle's reins;
And makes the body to advance, retire;
To turn, or stop, as she them slacks or strains. Davies.

Taught power's due use to people and to kings,
Taught nor to slack nor strain its tender strings. Pope.

3. To ease; to mitigate. Philips seems to have used it by mistake for slake.

Men, having been brought up at home under a strict rule of duty, always restrained by sharp penalties from lewd behaviour, so soon as they come thither, where they see laws more slackly tended, and the hard restraint which they were used unto now slacked, they grow more loose. Spenser.

If there be cure or charm
To respite, or deceive, or slack the pain
Of this ill mansion. Milton.

On our account has Jove,
Indulgent, to all moons some succulent plant
Allow'd, that poor helpless man might slack
His present thirst, and matter find for toil. Philips.

4. To remit for want of eagerness.

My guards
Are you, great powers, and th' unbated strength
Of a firm conscience; which shall arm each step Ta'en for the state, and teach me slack no pace. Ben Jonson.

With such delay well pleas'd, they slack their course. Milton.

5. To cause to be remitted; to make to abate.

You may sooner by imagination quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower than make him stand still. Bacon.

This doctrine must supersede and slacken all industry and endeavour, which is the lowest degree of that which hath been promised to be accepted by Christ; and leave nothing to us to deliberate or attempt, but only to obey our fate. Hammond.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,
The wise man's cumberance, if not snare; more apt
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise. Milton.

Balls of this metal slack'd Atlanta's pace,
And on the am'rous youth bestow'd the race. Waller.

One conduces to the poet's aim, which he is driving on in every line: the other slackens his pace, and diverts him from his way. Dryden.

6. To relieve; to unbend.

Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
Attended to the chase by all the flow'r
Of youth, whose hopes a nobler prey devour. Denham.

7. To withhold; to use less liberally.

He that so generally is good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than slack it where there is such abundance. Shakspeare.

8. To crumble; to deprive of the power of cohesion.

Some unslack'd lime cover with ashes, and let it stand till rain comes to slack the lime; then spread them together. Mortimer.

9. To neglect.

Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance
From those that she calls servants, or from mine?
If then they chanc'd to slack ye,
We could controul them. Shakspeare.

This good chance, that thus much favoureth,
He slacks not. Daniel.
Slack not the good presage, while heav'n inspires
Our minds to dare, and gives the ready fires. Dryden.

10. To repress; to make less quick or forcible.

I should be griev'd, young prince, to think my presence
Unbent your thoughts, and slacken'd 'em to arms. Addison.

SLACK. n. s. [from the verb.] Small coal; coal broken in small parts: as slacked
lime turns to powder.

SLACKLY. adv. [from slack.]

1. Loosely; not tightly; not closely.

That a king's children should be so convey'd,
So slackly guarded, and the search so slow
That could not trace them. Shakspeare.

SLACKNESS. n. s. [from slack.]

1. Looseness; not tightness.

2. Negligence; inattention; remissness.
It concerneth the duty of the church by law to provide, that the looseness and slackness of men may not cause the commandments of God to be un-executed. Hooker.

These thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behind-hand slackness. Shakspeare.
From man's effeminate slackness it begins,
Who should better hold his place.
By wisdom, and superior gifts receiv'd. Milton.

3. Want of tendency; tardiness.

When they have no disposition to shoot out above their lips, there is a slackness to heal, and a cure is very difficultly effected. Sharp.

4. Weakness; not force; not intenseness.

Through the slackness of motion, or long banishment from the air, it might gather some aptness to putrefy. Brerewood.

SLAG. n. s. The dross or recrement of metal.

Not only the cales but the glasses of metal may be of differing colours from the natural colour of the metal, as I have observed about the glass or slag of copper. Boyle.

SLAIE. n. s. A weaver's reed. Ainsw.

SLAIN. The participle passive of slay.

The slain of the Lord shall be many. Isaiab.
The king grew vain,
Fought all his battles o'er again;
And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice he slew
the slain. Dryden.

To SLAKE. v. a. [from slack, Skinner;
from slack, Islandick, to quench, Lye.]

1. To quench; to extinguish.

He did always strive Himself with salves to health for to restore,
And slake the heavenly fire that rag'd evermore. Spenser.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart. Shakspeare.

She with her cold hand slakes
His spirits, the sparks of life, and chills his heart. Craslow.

From Iulus' head
A lambent flame arose, which gently spread Around his brows, and on his temples sed:
Amaz'd, with running water we prepare
To quench the sacred fire, and slake his hair. Dryden.

The fragrant fruit from bending branches slake,
And with the chrystal stream their thirst at pleasure
slake. Blackmore.
Coarse are his meals, the fortune of the chase;
Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst. Addison.

2. It is used of lime: so that it is uncertain whether the original notion of To slack or slake lime, be to powder or quench it.

That which he saw happened to be fresh lime, and gathered before any rain had fallen to slake it. Woodward.

To SLAKE. v. n. [This is apparently from slack.]

1. To grow less tense; to be relaxed.

If she the body's nature did partake,
Her strength would with the body's strength decay;
But when the body's strongest sinews slake,
Then is the soul most active, quick, and gay. Davies.

2. To go out; to be extinguished.

She perceiving that his flame did slake,
And lov'd her only for his trophy's sake. Brown.

To SLAM. v. a. [lema, Islandick; schlagen, Dutch.] To slaughter; to crush. A word not used but in low conversation.

To SLANDER. v. a. [esclaudrie, Fr. scandalum, Lat.] To censure falsely; to belie.

Slander Valentine
With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent.

He hath slandered thy servant unto the king. Shakspeare.

Give me leave to speak as earnestly in truly commending it, as you have done in untruly and unkindly defacing and slandering it. Whitgift.

Thou dost with lies the throne invade,
By practice harden'd in the slandering trade;
Obtending heav'n for what'er ills befall,
And spitt'ring under specious names thy gall. Dryden.

Of all her dears she never slander'd one,
But cares not if a thousand are undone. Pope.

SLANDER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. False invective.

When slanders do not live in tongues;
When cut-purses come not to throngs. Shakspeare.
Since that, we hear he is in arms,
We think not so;
Yet charge the consul with our harms,
That let him go;
So in our censure of the state
We still do wander,
And make the careful magistrate
The mark of slander. Ben Jonson.

We are not to be dejected by the slanders and calumnies of bad men, because our integrity shall then be cleared by him who cannot err in judgment. Nelson.

2. Disgrace; reproach.

Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins. Shakspeare.

3. Disreputation; ill name.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most stepmothers,
Ill-eyed unto you. Shakspeare.

SLANDERER. n. s. [from slander.] One who belies another; one who lays false imputations on another.

In your servants suffer any offence against yourself rather than against God: endure not that they should be railers or slanderers, tell-tales, or sowers of dis-fension. Taylor.

Thou shalt answer for this, thou slanderer! Dryden.

SLANDEROUS. adj. [from slander.]

1. Uttering reproachful falsehoods.

What king so strong

Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue? Shaks.

To me belongs

The care to shun the blast of slanderous tongues;

Let malice, prone the virtuous to defame,

Thus with vile censure taint my spotless name. Pope.

2. Containing reproachful falsehoods; calumnious.

I was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detractors with the certain knowledge of their slanderous untruths. Spenser.

We lay these honours on this man,

To ease ourselves of divers slanderous loads. Shaks.

As by flattery a man opens his bosom to his mortal enemy, so by detraction and a slanderous misre-port he shuts the same to his best friends. South.

SLANDEROUSLY. adv. [from slanderous.]

Calumniously; with false reproach.

I may the better satisfy them who object these doubts, and slanderously bark at the courses which are held against that traitorous earl and his adherents.
Spenser.

They did slanderously object,

How that they durst not hazard to present

In person their defences. Daniel.

SLANG. The preterit of sling.

David sang a stone, and smote the Philistine.

1 Samuel.

SLANK. n. f. [alga marina.] An herb.

Ainsworth.

SLANT. } adj. [from slanghe, a

SLANTING. } serpent, Dutch. Skin- ner.] Oblique; not direct; not perpendicular.

Late the clouds

Justling, or push'd with winds, rude in their shock, Tine the slant lightning; whose thwart flame driv'n down

Kindles the gummy bark of fir and pine. Milton.

The sun round the globe describes th' equator line,

By which wise means he can the whole survey

With a direct or with a slanting ray,

In the succession of a night and day. Blackmore.

SLANTLY. } adv. [from slant.] Ob.

SLANTWISE. } liquely; not perpendicularly; slope.

Some maketh a hollownes half a foot deep,

With fower sets in it, set slantwise asleep. Tusser.

SLAP. n. f. [schlap, German.] A blow.

Properly with the hand open, or with something rather broad than sharp.

The laugh, the slap, the jocund curse go round.

Thomson.

SLAP. adv. [from the noun.] With a sudden and violent blow.

Peg's servants complained; and if they offered to come into the warehouse, then straight went the yard slap over their noddle. Arbutnot.

To SLAP. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with a slap.

Dick, who thus long had passive sat,

Here stroak'd his chin, and cock'd his hat;

Then slapp'd his hand upon the board;

And thus the youth put in his word. Prior.

SLAPDA'SH. interj. [from slap and dash.]

All at once: as any thing broad falls with a slap into the water, and dashes it about. A low word.

And yet, slapdash, is all again

In ev'ry sinew, nerve, and vein. Prior.

To SLASH. v. a. [slasa, to strike, Island-

ick.]

1. To cut; to cut with long cuts.

2. To lash. Slash is improper.

Daniel, a sprightly swain, that us'd to slash

The vig'rous steeds that drew his lord's calash,

To Peggy's side inclin'd. King.

To SLASH. v. n. To strike at random with a sword; to lay about him.

The knights with their bright burning blades

Broke their rude troops, and orders did confound,

Hewing and slashing at their idle shades. F. Queen.

Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book,

SLASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Cut; wound.

Some few received some cuts and slashes that had drawn blood. Clarendon.

2. A cut in cloth.

What! this a sleeve?

Here snip and nip, and cut, and slish and slash,

Like to a censor in a barber's shop. Shakspeare.

Distinguish'd slashes deck the great,

As each excels in birth or state;

His oylet-holes are more and ampler;

The king's own body was a sampler. Prior.

SLATCH. n. f. [a sea term.] The middle part of a rope or cable that hangs down loose. Bailey.

SLATE. n. f. [from slit: slate is in some countries a crack; or from esclate, a tile,

French.] A gray stone, easily broken into thin plates, which are used to cover houses, or to write upon.

A square cannot be so truly drawn upon a slate as it is conceived in the mind. Grew.

A small piece of a flat slate the ants laid over the hole of their nest, when they foresaw it would rain.

Spectat. r.

To SLATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover the roof; to tile.

Sonnets and elegies to Chloris,

Would raise a house about two stories,

A lyrick ode would slate. Swift.

SLATER. n. f. [from slate.] One who covers with slates or tiles.

SLATTER. n. f. [slatti, Swedish.] A woman negligent, not elegant or nice.

Without the raising of which sum,

You dare not be so troublesome

To pinch the slatterns black and blue,

For leaving you their work to do. Hudibras.

We may always observe, that a gossip in politicks is a slattern in her family. Addison.

The fallow skin is for the swarthy put,

And love can make a slattern of a slut. Dryden.

Beneath the lamp her tawdry ribbands glare,

The new-scour'd manteau, and the slattern air. Gay.

SLATY. adj. [from slate.] Having the nature of slate.

All the stone that is slaty, with a texture long, and parallel to the site of the stratum, will split only lengthways, or horizontally; and, if placed in any other position, 'tis apt to give way, start, and burst, when any considerable weight is laid upon it. Woodward.

SLAVE. n. f. [esclave, French.] It is said to have its original from the Slawi, or Sclavoians, subdued and sold by the Venetians.]

1. One mancipated to a master; not a freeman; a dependant.

The banish'd Kent, who in disguise

Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service

Improper for a slave. Shakspeare.

Thou elvish markt, abortive, rooting hog!

Thou that wast seal'd in thy nativity

The slave of nature, and the son of hell. Shakspeare.

Of guests we make them slaves

Inhospitably. Milton.

The condition of servants was different from what it is now, they being generally slaves, and such as were bought and sold for money. South.

Perspective a painter must not want; yet without subjecting ourselves so wholly to it, as to become slaves of it. Dryden.

To-morrow, should we thus express our friendship,
 Each might receive a slave into his arms:

This sun perhaps, this morning sun's the last

That e'er shall rise on Roman liberty. Addison.

2. One that has lost the power of resistance.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then

It grows impossible to govern men. Waller.

When once men are immersed in sensual things, and are become slaves to their passions and lusts, then are they the most disposed to doubt of the existence of God. Wilkins.

3. It is used proverbially for the lowest state of life.

Power shall not exempt the kings of the earth, and the great men, neither shall meanness excuse

the poorest slave. Nelson.

To SLAVE. v. n. [from the noun.] To drudge; to toil; to toil.

Had women been the makers of our laws,

The men should slave at cards from morn to night. Swift.

SLAVER. n. f. [saliva, Latin; slafa, Islandick.] Spittle running from the mouth; drivel.

Mathiolus hath a passage, that a toad communi-cates its venom not only by urine, but by the humidity and slaver of its mouth, which will not consist with truth. Brown.

Of all mad creatures, if the learn'd are right,

It is the slaver kills, and not the bite. Pope.

To SLAVER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be smeared with spittle.

Should I

Slaver with lips as common as the stairs

That mount the capitol; join gripes with hands

Made hard with hourly falsehood as with labour.

Shakspeare.

2. To emit spittle.

Miso came with scowling eyes to deliver a slaver-

ing good-morrow to the two ladies. Sidney.

Why must he sputter, spawl, and slaver it,

In vain, against the people's favourite? Swift.

To SLAVER. v. a. To smear with drivel.

Twitch'd by the slave, he mouths it more and more,

Till with white froth his gown is slaver'd o'er. Dryden.

SLAVERER. n. f. [slabbeard, Dutch; from slaver.] One who cannot hold his spittle;

a driveller; an idiot.

SLAVERY. n. f. [from slave.] Servitude;

the condition of a slave; the offices of a slave.

If my dissentings were out of error, weakness, or obstinacy, yet no man can think it other than the badge of slavery, by savage rudeness and importunate obtrusions of violence to have the mist of his error dispelled. King Charles.

SLAUGHTER. n. f. [on slauht, Saxon, from slægan, slægan, to strike or kill.]

Massacre; destruction by the sword.

Sinful Macduff,

They were all struck for thee!

Not for their own demerits, but for mine,

Fell slaughter on their souls. Shakspeare.

On each hand slaughter and gigantick deeds. Milton.

The pair you see,

Now friends below, in close embraces join;

But, when they leave the shady realms of night,

With mortal hate each other shall pursue:

What wars, what wounds, what slaughter shall ensue! Dryden.

To SLAUGHTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

To massacre; to slay; to kill with the sword.

Your castle is surpris'd, your wife and babes

Savagely slaughter'd. Shakspeare.

SLAUGHTERHOUSE, n. f. [slaughter and house.] House in which beasts are killed for the butcher.

Away with me, all you whose souls abhor

Th' uncleanly favour of a slaughterhouse;

For I am stifled with the smell of sin. Shakspeare.

SLAUGHTERMAN. n. s. [slaughter and man.] One employed in killing.

The mad mothers with their howls confus'd
Do break the clouds; as did the wives of Jewry,
At Herod's bloody hunting slaughtermen. Shaksp.
Ten chas'd by one.

Are now each one the slaughterman of twenty. Shaksp.

See, thou fight'st against thy countrymen;
And join'st with them will be thy slaughtermen. Shaksp.

SLAUGHTEROUS. adj. [from slaughter.] Destructive; murderous.

I have sapt full with horrors:
Direness familiar to my slaughterous thoughts Cannot once start me. Shaksp.

SLA'VISH. adj. [from slave.] Servile; mean; base; dependant.

A thing
More slavish did I ne'er, than answering
A slave without a knock. Shaksp.

You have among you many a purchas'd slave,
Which, like your asses, and your dogs and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish part,
Because you bought them. Shaksp.

The supreme God, t' whom all things ill
Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
Would send a glitt'ring guardian, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unassail'd. Milton.

Those are the labour'd births of slavish brains;
Not the effect of poetry, but pains. Denham.

Slavish bards our mutual loves rehearse
In lying strains and ignominious verse. Prior.

SLA'VISHLY. adv. [from slavish.] Servilely; meanly.

SLA'VISHNESS. n. s. [from slavish.] Servility; meanness.

To SLAY. v. a. pret. slew; part. pass. slain. [slaban, Gothick; plean, Saxon; slachten, Dutch, to strike.] To kill; to butcher; to put to death.

Her father's brother
Would be her lord; or shall I say her uncle?
Or he that slew her brothers and her uncle? Shaksp.

Tyrant, shew thy face:
If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still. Shaksp.

I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God. Revelations.

Slay and make ready. Genesis.
Wrath killeth the foolish man, and envy slayeth
the silly one. Job.

Of Trojan chiefs he view'd a numerous train;
All much lamented, all in battle slain. Dryden.

He must
By blood and battles pow'r maintain,
And slay the monarchs, ere he rule the plain. Prior.

SLA'YER. n. s. [from slay.] Killer; murderer; destroyer.

Witness the guiltless blood pour'd oft on ground;
The crowned often slain, the slayer crown'd. Fairy Queen.

They slew those that were slayers of their countrymen. Abbot.

The slayer of himself yet saw I there;
The gore congeal'd was clotted in his hair;
With eyes half clos'd and gaping mouth he lay,
And grim as when he breath'd his fullen soul away. Dryden.

SLEAVE. n. s. [Of this word I know not well the meaning: sleave silk is explained by Gouldman, flocus sericus, a lock of silk; and the women still say, sleave the silk, for untwist it. Ainsworth calls a weaver's shuttle or reed a slay. To sley is to part a twist into single fibres.]

I on a fountain light,
Whose brim with pinks was platted,
The banks with daffodillies dight
With grafs like sleave was matted. Drayton.

SLEAZY. adj. [often written sleezy.] Weak; wanting substance. This seems to be of the same race with sleave, or from to slay.

SLED. n. s. [slæd, Danish; sledde, Dutch.] A carriage drawn without wheels.

The sled, the tumbrel, hurdles, and the flail,
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden.

SLEDD'ED. adj. [from sled.] Mounted on a sled.

So frown'd he once when in an angry parle,
He smote the sledded Polack on the ice. Shaksp.

SLEDGE. n. s. [pleeg, Saxon; sleggia, Islandick.]

1. A large heavy hammer.

They him spying, both with greedy force,
At once upon him ran, and him beset,
With strokes of mortal steel, without remorse,
And on his shield like iron sledges bet. F. Queen.
The painful smith, with force of fervent heat,
The hardest iron soon doth mollify,
That with his heavy sledge he can it beat,
And fashion to what he it list apply. Spenser.

The uphand sledge is used by under-workmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter and draw it out; they use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift their hammer higher than their head. Moxm.

It would follow that the quick stroke of a light hammer should be of greater efficacy than any softer and more gentle striking of a great sledge. Wilkins.

2. A carriage without wheels, or with very low wheels; properly a sled. See SLED.

In Lancashire they use a sort of sledge made with thick wheels, to bring their marl out, drawn with one horse. Mortimer.

SLEEK. adj. [sleych, Dutch.]

1. Smooth; nitid; glossy.

Let me have men about me that are fat,
Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep a-nights. Shaksp.

How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,
As if it fed ye; and how sleek and wanton
Y' appear in ev'ry thing may bring my ruin. Shaksp.
What time the groves were clad in green,
The fields all drest in flowers,
And that the sleek-hair'd nymphs were seen
To seek them summer bowers. Drayton.

As in gaze admiring, oft he bow'd
His turret crest, and sleek enamell'd neck, Fawning. Milton.

Thy head and hair are sleek,
And then thou kemb'st the tuzzes on thy cheek. Dryden.

So sleek her skin, so faultless was her make,
Ev'n Juno did unwilling pleasure take
To see so fair a rival. Dryden.

2. Not rough; not harsh.

Those rugged names to our like mouths grow sleek,
That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp. Milton.

To SLEEK. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To comb smooth and even.

Yet are the men more loose than they,
More kemb'd, and bath'd, and rubb'd, and trimm'd,
More sleek'd, more soft, and slacker limb'd. Ben Jonson.

By dead Parthenope's dear tomb,
And fair Ligea's golden comb,
Wherewith the fits on diamond rocks
Sleeking her soft alluring locks. Milton.

2. To render soft, smooth, or glossy.

Gentle my lord, sleek o'er your rugged looks;
Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests to-night. Shaksp.

She does sleek
With crumbs of bread and milk, and lies a-nights
In her neat gloves. Ben Jonson.

The persuasive rhetoric
That sleek'd his tongue, and won so much on Eve,
So little here, nay lost. Milton.

A sheet of well sleeked marble paper did not call any of its distinct colours upon the wall. Boyle.

A cruise of fragrance form'd of burnish'd gold,
Odour divine! whose soft refreshing streams
Sleek the smooth skin, and scent the snowy limbs. Pope.

SLEEKLY. adv. [from sleek.] Smoothly; glossily.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, and their blue coats brush'd. Shaksp.

SLEEKSTONE. n. s. [sleek and stone.] A smoothing stone.

The purest pasteboard with a sleekstone rub smooth, and as even as you can. Peacocks.

To SLEEP. v. n. [sleepan, Gothick; plee- pan, Saxon; slaepen, Dutch.]

1. To take rest, by suspension of the mental and corporal powers.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard;
Some time I shall sleep out; the rest I'll whistle. Shaksp.

Where's Pede?—go you, and where you find a maid,

That, ere she sleep, hath thrice her prayers said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy;
Sleep she as sound as careless infancy;
But those that sleep, and think not on their sins, Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and thins. Shaksp.

If the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep with his pledge. Deuteronomy.

Peace, good reader! do not weep;
Peace! the lovers are asleep;

They, sweet turtles! folded lie
In the last knot that love could tie.

Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night be gone,
And th' eternal morrow dawn,

Then the curtains will be drawn,
And they waken with that light

Whose day shall never sleep in night. Crashaw.

Those who at any time sleep without dreaming, can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy without their knowing it. Locke.

2. To rest; to be motionless.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out the burley-boned clown in chins of beef ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I beseech Jove on my knees thou mayst be turned into hobnails. Shaksp.

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank!
Here will we sit, and let the sounds of musick
Creep in our ears. Shaksp.

The giddy ship, betwixt the winds and tides,
Forc'd back and forwards, in a circle rides,
Stunn'd with the different blows; then shoots again,
Till counterbuff'd she stops, and sleeps again. Dryden.

3. To live thoughtlessly.

We sleep over our happiness, and want to be roused into a quick thankful sense of it. Atterbury.

4. To be dead: death being a state from which man will some time awake.

If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. 1 Thessalonians.

A person is said to be dead to us, because we cannot raise from the grave; though he only sleeps unto God, who can raise from the chamber of death. Ayliffe.

5. To be inattentive; not vigilant.

Heav'n will one day open
The king's eyes, that so long have sleep upon
This bold, bad man. Shaksp.

6. To be unnoticed, or unattended.

You ever
Have wish'd the sleeping of this business, never Desir'd it to be stir'd. Shaksp.

SLEEP. v. n. [from the verb.] Repose; rest; suspension of the mental and corporal powers; slumber.

Methought I heard a voice cry, sleep no more!
Macbeth doth murder sleep; the innocent sleep;
Sleep, that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care;
The birth of each day's life, fore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast. Shaksp.

That sleeps might sweetly seale
His redfull eyes, he enter'd, and in his bed
In silence took. Chapman.

Cold calleth the spirits to succour, and therefore they cannot so well close and go together in the head, which is ever requisite to sleep. And for the same cause, pain and noise hinder sleep; and darkness furthereth sleep. Bacon.

Beasts that sleep in winter, as wild bears, during their sleep wax very fat, though they eat nothing. Bacon.

His fasten'd hands the rudder keep,
And, fix'd on heav'n, his eyes repel invading sleep. Dryden.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,
His hat adorn'd with wings disclos'd the god,
And in his hand the sleep compelling rod. Dryden.

Infants spend the greatest part of their time in sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat, or some pain forces the mind to perceive it. Locke.

SLEEPER. n. f. [from sleep.]

1. One who sleeps; one who is not awake.
Sound, musick; come, my queen, take hand with me,
And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be. Shakspeare.

What's the business,
That such an hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house? Shakspeare.

In some countries, a plant which shutteth in the night, openeth in the morning, and openeth wide at noon, the inhabitants say is a plant that sleepeth. There be sleepers now then; for almost all flowers do the like. Bacon.

Night is indeed the province of his reign;
Yet all his dark exploits no more contain
Than a spy taken, and a sleeper slain. Dryden.

2. A lazy inactive drone.

He must be no great eater, drinker, nor sleeper, that will discipline his senses, and exert his mind;
every worthy undertaking requires both. Grew.

3. That which lies dormant, or without effect.

Let penal laws, if they have been sleepers of long, or if grown unfit for the present time, be by wise judges confined in the execution. Bacon.

4. [exocetus.] A fish. Ainsw.

SLEEPILY. adv. [from sleep.]

1. Drowsily; with desire to sleep.

2. Dull; lazily.

I rather choose to endure the wounds of those darts, which envy casteth at novelty, than to go on safely and sleepily in the easy way of ancient mistakings. Raleigh.

3. Stupidly.

He would make us believe that Luther in these actions pretended to authority, forgetting what he had sleepily owned before. Atterbury.

SLEEPINESS. n. f. [from sleepy.] Drowsiness; disposition to sleep; inability to keep awake.

Watchfulness precedes too great sleepiness, and is the most illboding symptom of a fever. Arbutnot.

SLEEPLESS. adj. [from sleep.] Wanting sleep; always awake.

The field
To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd,
Though after sleepless night. Milton.

While pensive poets painful vigils keep,
Sleepless themselves to give their readers sleep. Pope.

SLEEPY. adj. [from sleep.]

1. Drowsy; disposed to sleep.

2. Not awake.

Why did you bring these daggers from the place?
They must lie there. Go, carry them, and smear
The sleepy grooms with blood. Shakspeare.

She wak'd her sleepy crew,
And, rising haity, took a short adieu. Dryden.

3. Soporiferous; somniferous; causing sleep.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us. Shakspeare.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benumb not still. Milton.

I slept about eight hours, and no wonder; for the physicians had mingled a sleepy potion in the wine. Gulliver.

SLEET. n. f. [perhaps from the Danish slæt.] A kind of smooth small hail or

VOL. II.

snow, not falling in flakes, but single particles.

Now van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midmost battles hast'ning up behind,
Who view, far off, the storm of falling sleet,
And hear their thunder rattling in the wind. Dryd.

Perpetual sleet and driving snow
Obscure the skies, and hang on herds below.
Huge oxen stand inclos'd in wintry walls
Of snow congeal'd. Dryden.

Rains would have been poured down, as the vapours became cooler; next sleet, then snow, and ice. Cheyne.

To SLEET. v. n. [from the noun.] To snow in small particles, intermixed with rain.

SLEETTY. adj. [from the noun.] Bringing sleet.

SLEEVE. n. f. [slip, Saxon.]

1. The part of the garment that covers the arms.

Once my well-waiting eyes espied my treasure,
With sleeves turn'd up, loose hair, and breast enlarged,
Her father's corn, moving her fair limbs, measure. Sidney.

The deep smock sleep, which the Irish women use, they say, was old Spanish; and yet that should seem rather to be an old English fashion: for in armory, the fashion of the manche, which is given in arms, being nothing else but a sleeve, is fashioned much like to that sleeve. And knights, in ancient times, used to wear their mistress's or love's sleeve upon their arms; sir Launcelot wore the sleeve of the fair maid of Asteloth in a tourney. Spenser.

Your hose should be ungartered, your sleeve unbuttoned, your shoe untied, demonstrating a careless desolation. Shakspeare.

You would think a smock a she-angel, he so chants to the sleeve band, and the work about the square on't. Shakspeare.

He was clothed in cloth, with wide sleeves and a cape. Bacon.

In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
Their hoods and sleeves the same. Dryden.

2. SLEEVE, in some provinces, signifies a knot or skein of filk, which is by some very probably supposed to be its meaning in the following passage. [See SLEEVE.]

The innocent sleep;
Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care. Shak.

3. Sleeve, Dutch, signifies a cover; any thing spread over: which seems to be the sense of sleeve in the proverbial phrase.

A brace of sharpeners laugh at the whole roguery in their sleeves. L'Estrange.

Men know themselves utterly void of those qualities which the impudent sycophant ascribes to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing. South.

John laughed heartily in his sleeve at the pride of the esquire. Arbutnot.

4. To hang on a sleeve; to make dependent.

It is not for a man which doth know, or should know, what orders, and what peaceable government requireth, to ask why we should hang our judgment upon the church's sleeve, and why in matters of orders more than in matters of doctrine. Hooker.

5. [lolligo, Latin.] A fish. Ainsw.

SLEEVED. adj. [from sleeve.] Having sleeves.

SLEEVELESS. adj. [from sleeve.]

1. Wanting sleeves; having no sleeves.

His clothes were strange tho' coarse, and black tho' bare;

Sleeveless his jerkin was, and it had been Velvet; but 'twas now, so much ground was seen, Become tufftuffaty. Donne.

They put on sleeveless coats of home-spun cotton. Sandys.

Behold yon isle by palmers, pilgrims, trod, Grave mummers! sleeveless some, and shirtless others. Pope.

2. Wanting reasonableness; wanting propriety; wanting solidity. [This sense, of which the word has been long possessed, I know not well how it obtained.
Skinner thinks it properly liveless or lifeless: to this I cannot heartily agree, though I know not what better to suggest. Can it come from sleeve, a knot or skein, and so signify unconnected, hanging ill together? or from sleeve, a cover, and therefore means plainly absurd, foolish without palliation?]

This sleeveless tale of transubstantiation was brought into the world by that other fable of the multipresence. Hall.

My landlady quarrelled with him for sending every one of her children on a sleeveless errand, as she calls it. Spectator.

SLEIGHT. n. f. [slag'd, cunning, Idan-dick.] Artful trick; cunning artifice;
dexterous practice: as, sleight of hand, the tricks of a juggler. This is often written, but less properly, flight.

He that exhorted to beware of an enemy's policy, doth not give counsel to be impolite; but rather to be all prudent foresight, lest our simplicity be over-reached by cunning sleights. Hooker.

Fair Una to the red cross knight

Botrothed is with joy;

Though false Duessa, it to bar,
Her false sleights do employ. Fairy Queen.

Upon the corner of the moon,

There hangs a vap'rous drop profound;

I'll catch it ere it come to ground;

And that distill'd by magick sleights,

Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakspeare.

Out stept the ample size
Of mighty Ajax, huge in strength; to him, Laertes'

son,
That crafty one as huge in sleight. Chapman.

She could not so convey
The massy substance of that idiot great;

What sleight had she the wardens to betray?

What strength to heave the goddess from her seat?

Fairfax.

In the wily snake

Whatever sleights, none would suspicious mark,

As from his wit and native subtilty

Proceeding. Milton.

Doubtless the pleasure is as great

Of being cheated, as to cheat;

As lookers on feel most delight,

That least perceive the juggler's sleight. Hudibras.

Good humour is but a sleight of hand, or a faculty making truths look like appearances, or appearances like truths. L'Estrange.

When we hear death related, we are all willing to favour the sleight, when the poet does not too grossly impose upon us. Dryden.

While innocent he scorns ignoble flight,
His honest friends preserve him by a sleight. Swift.

SLENDER. adj. [slinder, Dutch.]

1. Thin; small in circumference compared with the length; not thick.

So thick the roses bushing round
About her glow'd; half stooping to support
Each flow'r of slender stalk. Milton.

2. Small in the waist; having a fine shape.

What slender youth, bedew'd with liquid odours,
Courts thee on roses in some pleasant cave? Milton.

Beauteous Helen shines among the rest,
Tall, slender, straight, with all the graces blest.

Dryden.

3. Not bulky; flight; not strong.

Love in these labyrinths his slaves detains,
And mighty hearts are held in slender chains. Pope.

4. Small; inconsiderable; weak.

Yet they, who claim the general assent of the whole world unto that which they teach, and do not fear to give very hard and heavy sentence upon as many as refuse to embrace the same, must have special regard, that their first foundations and grounds be more than slender probabilities. Hooker.

Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;
Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident. Shaksp.
Positively to define that season, there is no slender difficulty. Brown.

It is a very slender comfort that relies upon this nice distinction, between things being troublesome, and being evils; when all the evil of affliction lies in the trouble it creates to us. Tillson.

5. Sparing; less than enough: as, a slender estate, and slender parts.

At my lodging,
The worst is this, that, at so slender warning,
You're like to have a thin and slender pittance. Shaksp.

6. Not amply supplied.

With this he did a herd of goats controul,
Which by the way he met, and slily stole;
Clad like a country swain.
Dryden.

May hypocrites,
That slily speak one thing, another think,
Hateful as hell, pleas'd with the relish weak,
Drink on unwar'd, till by enchanting cups
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose,
And through intemperance grow a while sincere.
Phillips.

SLIM, adv. [a cant word as it seems, and therefore not to be used.] Slender; thin of shape.

A thin slim-gutt'd fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a henroost; and when he had stuff'd his guts well, squeezed hard to get out again; but the hole was too little.
L'Estrange.

I was jogged on the elbow by a slim young girl of seventeen.
Addison.

SLIME, n. f. [slim, Sax. sligm, Dut.]

are turned with him into stubble.
Job.

Dreads he the twanging of the archer's string?
Or slinging stones from the Phœnician sling?
Sandys.

Slings have so much greater swiftness than a stone thrown from the hand, by how much the end of the sling is farther off from the shoulder-joint,

the center of motion.
Wilkins.

The Tuscan king
Laid by the lance, and took him to the sling; Thrice whirl'd the thong around his head, and threw

The heated lead, half melted as it flew.
Dryden.

Whirl'd from a sling, or from an engine thrown,
Amidst the foes, as flies a mighty stone,
So flew the beast.
Dryden.

2. A throw; a stroke.

At one sling
Of thy victorious arm, well-pleasing son,
Both sin and death, and yawning grave at last Through chaos hurl'd, obstruct the mouth of hell.

to creep.] To sneak; to steal out of the way.

We will slink away in supper time, disguise us at my lodging, and return all in an hour.
Shakespeare.

As we do turn our backs
From our companion, thrown into his grave,
So his familiars from his buried fortunes
slink away.
Shakespeare.

He, after Eve seduc'd, unminded slunk
Into the wood fast by.
Milton.

Not far from hence doth dwell
A cunning man, hight Sidrophel,
To whom all people far and near
On deep importances repair;
When brass and pewter hap to stray,
And linen slinks out of the way.
Hudibras.

She slunk into a corner, where she lay trembling till the company went their way.
L'Estrange.

He would pinch the children in the dark, and then slink into a corner, as if nobody had done it.
Arbutnot.

A weasel once made shift to slink
In at a corn-lost through a chink;
But having amply stuff'd his skin,
Could not get out as he got in.

weather keep her where she may have good springwater to drink.
Mortimer.

To SLIP, v. n. [slipan, Sax. slippen, Dut.]

1. To slide; not to tread firm.

If a man walks over a narrow bridge when he is drunk, it is no wonder that he forgets his caution while he overlooks his danger; but he who is sober, and views that nice separation between himself and the devouring deep, so that, if he should slip, he sees his grave gaping under him, surely must needs take every step with horror and the utmost caution.
South.

A skillful dancer on the ropes slips willingly, and makes a seeming stumble, that you may think him in great hazard, while he is only giving you a proof of his dexterity. Dryden.

If after some distinguish'd leap,
He drops his pole, and seems to slip,
Straight gath'ring all his active strength,
He rises higher half his length. Prior.

2. To slide; to glide.

river a wanton nymph, which still would slip from
it. Sidney.

The blessing of the Lord shall slip from thee, without doing thee any good, if thou hast not ceased from doing evil. Taylor.

Slipping from thy mother's eye, thou went'st
Alone into the temple; there was found
Among the gravest rabbies disputant,
On points and questions fitting Moses' chair. Milt.
Thrice around his neck his arms he threw,
And thrice the sitting shadow slipp'd away,
Like winds or empty dreams that fly the day. Dryden.

Though with pale cheeks, wet beard, and dropping hair,
None but my Ceyx could appear so fair,
I would have strain'd him with a strict embrace;
But through my arms he slipped, and vanish'd from the place. Dryden.

When a corn slips out of their paws, they take hold of it again. Spectator.

Or satiate fury yield it from our foe. Milton.

One ill man may not think of the mischief he could do, or slip the occasion. L'Esrange.

To slip the market, when thus fairly offered, is great imprudence. Collier.

For watching occasions to correct others in their discourse, and not to slip any opportunity of shewing their talents, scholars are most blamed. Locke.

Thus far my author has slipped his first design; not a letter of what has been yet said promoting any ways
the trial. Atterbury.

3. To part twigs from the main body by laceration.

The runners spread from the master-roots, and have little sprouts or roots to them, which, being cut four or five inches long, make excellent sets: the branches also may be slipped and planted. Mortim.

4. To escape from; to leave slyly.

This bird you aim'd at, though you hit it not:
—Oh, sir, Lucentio slipp'd me like his greyhound,
Which runs himself, and catches for his master. Shak.

5. To let loose.

On Eryx altars lays
A lamb new fallen to the stormy seas;
Then slips his haulfers, and his anchors weighs. Dryden.

faithful service of a long life. L'Esrange.

Alonzo, mark the characters;
And if th' impostor's pen have made a slip
That shews it counterfeit, mark that and save me. Dryden.

Lighting upon a very easy slip I have made, in putting one seemingly indifferent word for another, that discovery opened to me this present view. Locke.

Any little slip is more conspicuous in a good man's conduct than in another's, as it is not of a piece with his character. Spectator.

3. A twig torn from the main stock.

In truth, they are fewer, when they come to be discuss'd by reason, than otherways they seem, when by heat of contention they are divided into many slips, and of every branch an heap is made. Hooker.

The slips of their vines have been brought into Spain. Abbot.

Adoption strives with nature, and choice breeds
A native slip to us from foreign seeds. Shakspeare.

I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. Shakspeare.

God is said to harden the heart permissively, but not operatively, nor effectively; as he who only lets loose a greyhound out of the slip, is said to hound him at the hare. Bramhall.

5. An escape; a desertion. I know not whether to give the slip be not originally taken from a dog, that runs and leaves the string or slip in the leader's hand.

The more shame for her goodyship,
To give so near a friend the slip. Hudibras.

The daw did not like his companion, and gave him the slip, and away into the woods. L'Esrange.

Their explications are not yours, and will give you the slip. Locke.

6. A long narrow piece.

Between these eastern and western mountains lies a slip of lower ground, which runs across the island. Addison.

SLIPBOARD. n. s. [slip and board.] A board sliding in grooves.

I ventured to draw back the slipboard on the roof, contrived on purpose to let in air. Gulliver's Travels.

SLIPKNOT. n. s. [slip and knot.] A bow-knot; a knot easily untied.

They draw off so much line as is necessary, and fasten the rest upon the line-rowl with a slipknot, that no more line turn off. Moxon.

In large wounds a single knot first; over this a little linen compress, on which is another single knot; and then a slipknot, which may be loosened upon inflammation. Sharp.

SLIPPER or Slipshoe. n. s. [from slip.]

1. A shoe without leather behind, into which the foot slips easily.

A gown made of the finest wool,
Which from our pretty lambs we pull;
Fair lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold. Raleigh.

If he went abroad too much, she'd use
To give him slippers, and lock up his shoes. King.

Thrice rung the bell, the slipper knock'd the ground,
And the press'd watch return'd a silver sound. Pope.

2. [crepis, Latin.] An herb.

SLIPPER. adj. [slipun, Sax.] Slippery; not firm. Obsolete. Perhaps never in use but for poetical convenience.

A trustless state of earthly things, and slipper hope
Of mortal men, that swinke and sweat for nought. Spenser.

SLIPPERILY. adv. [from slippery.] In a slippery manner.

SLIPPERINESS. n. s. [from slippery.]

1. State or quality of being slippery; smoothness; glibness.

We do not only fall by the slipperiness of our tongues, but we deliberately discipline them to mischief. Government of the Tongue.

The schirrus may be distinguished by its want of inflammation in the skin, its smoothness, and slipperiness deep in the breast. Sharp.

2. Uncertainty; want of firm footing.

SLIPPERY. adj. [slipun, Saxon; sliperig, Swedish.]

1. Smooth; glib.

They trim their feathers, which makes them oily and slippery, that the water slips off. Mortimer.

Only substances oily lubricate and make the bones slippery. Arbutnot.

2. Not affording firm footing.

Did you know the art o' th' court,
As hard to leave as keep; whose top to climb,
Is certain falling; or so slippery, that
The fear's as bad as falling. Shakspeare.

SLI

His promise to trust to as slippery as ice. Tusser.
Their way shall be as slippery ways in the darkness. Jeremiah.

The slipp'ry tops of human state,
The gilded pinnacles of fate. Cowley.
The higher they are raised, the giddier they are;
the more slippery is their standing, and the deeper their fall. L'Estrange.

The highest hill is the most slipp'ry place,
And fortune mocks us with a smiling face. Denham.
Beauty, like ice, our footing does betray;
Who can tread sure on the smooth slippery way? Dryden.

3. Hard to hold; hard to keep.

Thus surely bound, yet be not overbold,
The slipp'ry god will try to loose his hold;
And various forms assume, to cheat thy fight,
And with vain images of beasts affright. Dryden.

4. Not standing firm.

When they fall, as being slipp'ry standers,
The love that lean'd on them, as slipp'ry too,
Doth one pluck down another, and together
Die in the fast. Shakspeare.

5. Uncertain; changeable; mutable; instable.

Oh world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,
Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal and exercise,
Are still together; who twine, as 'twere, in love
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissension of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakspeare.

He looking down
With scorn or pity on the slippery state
Of kings, will tread upon the neck of fate. Denham.

6. Not certain in its effect.

One sure trick is better than a hundred slippery ones. L'Estrange.

7. [lubrique, French.] Not chaste.

My wife is slippery. Shakspeare.
SLIP'PY. adj. [from slip.] Slippery;
easily sliding. A barbarous provincial word.

The white of an egg is rosy, slippy, and nutritious. Floyer.

The slipshod 'prentice from his master's door
Had par'd the dirt, and sprinkled round the floor. Swift.

SLIP'SLOP. n. f. Bad liquor. A low word formed by reduplication of slop.

SLISH. n. f. A low word formed by reduplicating slash.

What! this a sleeve?
Here's snip and nip, and slish and slash,
Like to a censor in a barber's shop. Shakspeare.

To SLIT. v. a. pret. and part. slit and slitted. [slitan, Saxon.] To cut longwise.

To make plants medicinale, slit the root, and infuse into it the medicine, as hellebore, opium, scammony, and then bind it up. Bacon.

The deers of Arginusa had their ears divided, occasioned at first by slitting the ears. Brown.

Had it hit
The upper part of him, the blow
Had slit, as sure as that below. Hudibras.

We slit the preternatural body open. Wifeman.
A liberty might be left to the judges to inflict death, or some notorious mark, by slitting the nose, or brands upon the cheeks. Temple.

If a tinued or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of an uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton.

He took a freak
To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.

SLIT. n. f. [slit, Saxon.] A long cut, or narrow opening.

SLO

In St. James's fields is a conduit of brick, unto which joineth a low vault, and at the end of that a round house of stone; and in the brick conduit there is a window, and in the round house a slit or rift of some little breadth; if you cry out in the rift, it will make a fearful roaring at the window. Bacon.

Where the tender rinds of trees disclose
Their shooting gems, a swelling knot there grows:
Just in that place a narrow slit we make,
Then other buds from bearing trees we take;
Inserted thus, the wounded rind we close. Dryden.

I found, by looking through a slit or oblong hole, which was narrower than the pupil of my eye, and held close to it parallel to the prisms, I could see the circles much distincter, and visible to a far greater number, than otherwise. Newton.

To SLIVE. } v. a. [slitan, Saxon.] To SLIVER. } To split; to divide longwise; to tear off longwise.

Liver of blaspheming Jew;
Gall of goat; and slips of yew, Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shakspeare.

SLIVER. n. f. [from the verb.] A branch torn off. Sliver, in Scotland, still denotes a slice cut off: as, he took a large sliver of the beef.

There on the pendent boughs her coronet weed
Clamb'ring to hang, an envious sliver broke,
When down her weedy coronet and herself
Fell in the weeping brook. Shakspeare.

SLOATS. n. f. Of a cart, are those underpieces which keep the bottom together. Bailey.

SLO'BER. n. f. [glawoerio, Welsh.] Slaver. See SLAVER.

To SLOCK. v. n. [slock, to quench, Swedish and Scottish.] To slake; to quench.

SLOE. n. f. [sla, Saxon; slae, Danish.] The fruit of the blackthorn, a small wild plum.

The fair pomegranate might adorn the pine,
The grape the bramble, and the sloe the vine. Blackmore.

When you fell your underwoods, sow haws and sloes in them, and they will furnish you, without doing of your woods any hurt. Mortimer.

SLOOP. n. f. A small ship, commonly with only two masts.

To SLOP. v. a. [from lap, lop, slop.] To drink grossly and greedily.

SLOP. n. f. [from the verb.] Mean and vile liquor of any kind. Generally some nauseous or useless medicinal liquor.

The sick husband here wanted for neither slops nor doctors. L'Estrange.
But thou, whatever slops she will have bought,
Be thankful. Dryden.

SLOP. n. f. [slap, Saxon; sloove, Dutch, a covering.] Trowsers; open breeches.

What said Mr. Dumbledon about the fatten for my short cloak and slops. Shakspeare.

SLOPE. adj. [This word is not derived from any satisfactory original. Junius omits it: Skinner derives it from slap, lax, Dutch; and derives it from the curve of a loose rope. Perhaps its original may be latent in loopen, Dutch, to run, slope being easy to the runner.] Oblique; not perpendicular. It is generally used of acclivity or declivity, forming an angle greater or less with the plane of the horizon.

Where there is a greater quantity of water, and space enough, the water moveth with a sloper rise and fall. Bacon.

Murm'ring waters fall
Down the slope hills, dispers'd, or in a lake,
That to the fringed bank with myrtle crown'd
Her crystal mirror holds, unite their streams. Milton.

SLOPE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

SLO

1. An oblique direction; any thing obliquely directed.

2. Declivity; ground cut or formed with declivity.

Growing upon slopes is caused for that moss, as it cometh of moisture, so the water must but slide, not be in a pool. Bacon.

My lord advances with majestic mien,
And when up ten steep slopes you've dragg'd your thighs,

Just at his study door he'll bless your eyes. Pope. SLOPE. adv. Obliquely; not perpendicularly.

Uriel
Return'd on that bright beam, whose point now rais'd Bore him slope downward to the sun, now fall'n. Milton.

To SLOPE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To form to obliquity or declivity; to direct obliquely.

Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,
Though palaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations. Shakspeare.

On each hand the flames
Driv'n backward, slope their pointed spires, and roll'd

In billows, leave i' th' midst a horrid vale. Milton.
The star, that rose at evening bright,
Toward heav'n's descent had slop'd his westering wheel. Milton.

All night I slept, oblivious of my pain;
Aurora dawn'd, and Phœbus shin'd in vain;
Nor, till oblique he slop'd his evening ray,
Had Somnus dried the balmy dew away. Pope.

To SLOPE. v. n. To take an oblique or declivous direction.

Between the midst and these, the gods assign'd
Two habitable seats for human kind;
And cross their limits cut a sloping way,
Which the twelve signs in beauteous order sway. Dryden.

There is a handsome work of piles made sloping athwart the river, to stop the trees which are cut down, and cast into the river. Brown.

Up starts a palace, lo! th' obedient base
Slopes at its foot, the woods its sides embrace. Pope.
There is a straight hole in every ant's nest half an inch deep; and then it goes down sloping into a place where they have their magazine. Spectator.

On the south aspect of a sloping hill,
Whose skirts meand'ring Peneus washes still,
Our pious lab'rer pass'd his youthful days
In peace and charity, in pray'r and praise. Harte.

SLO'PENESS. n. f. [from slope.] Obliquity; declivity; not perpendicularity.

The Italians give the cover a graceful pence of slopeness, dividing the whole breadth into nine parts, whereof two shall serve for the elevation of the highest ridge. Wotton.

SLOPEWISE. adj. [slope and wise.] Obliquely; not perpendicularly.

The Wear is a frith, reaching slopewise through the Ose from the land to low-water mark, and having in it a bent or cod with an eye-hook; where the fish entering, upon their coming back with the ebb, are stopped from issuing out again, forsaken by the water, and left dry on the ose. Carew.

SLO'PINGLY. adv. [from sloping.] Obliquely; not perpendicularly.

These atoms do not descend always perpendicularly, but sometimes slopingly. Digby.

SLO'PPY. adj. [from slop.] Miry and wet; perhaps rather slabby. See SLAB.

To SLOT. v. a. [slugben, Dutch.] To strike or clash hard.

SLOT. n. f. [slod, Islandick.] The track of a deer.

SLOTH. n. f. [slæpð, slæpð, Saxon.] It might therefore be not improperly written sloath, but that it seems better to regard the orthography of the primitive slov.]

1. Slowness; tardiness.

These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory slotb and tricks of Rome. Shakspeare.

2. Laziness; sluggishness; idleness.

False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand,
Hog in slotb, fox in stealth. Shakspeare.
They change their course to pleasure, ease, and slotb Milton.

Industry approach'd,

And rous'd him from his miserable slotb. Thomson.

3. An animal.

The slotb is an animal of so slow a motion, that he will be three or four days at least in climbing up and coming down a tree; and to go the length of fifty paces on plain ground, requires a whole day.

Grew.

SLO'THFUL. adj. [slotb and full.] Idle; lazy; sluggish; inactive; indolent; dull of motion.

He that is slotbful in his work, is brother to him that is a great waster. Proverbs.

The desire of the slotbful killeth him; for his hands refuse to labour. Proverbs.

To vice industrious; but to nobler deeds
Timorous and slotbful. Milton.

Flora commands those nymphs and knights,
Who liv'd in slotbful ease and loose delights,
Who never acts of honour durst pursue,
The men inglorious knights, the ladies all untrue.

Dryden.

The very soul of the slotbful does effectually but lie drowning in his body, and the whole man is totally given up to his senses. L'Estrange.

Another is deaf to all the motives to piety, by indulging an idle slotbful temper. Law.

SLO'THFULLY. adv. [from slotbful.] Idly;
lazily; with slotb.

SLO'THFULNESS. n. f. [from slotbful.] Idleness;
laziness; sluggishness; inactivity.

To trust to labour without prayer, argueth impiety and prophaneness; it maketh light of the providence of God; and although it be not the intent of a religious mind, yet it is the fault of those men whose religion wanteth light of a mature judgment to direct it, when we join with our prayer slotbfulness, and neglect of convenient labour. Hooker.

Slotbfulness casteth into a deep sleep, and an idle soul shall suffer hunger. Proverbs.

SLOUCH. n. f. [slouf, Danish, stupid.]

1. A downcast look; a depression of the head. In Scotland, an ungainly gait, as also the person whose gait it is.

Our doctor has every quality that can make a man useful; but, alas! he hath a sort of slouch in his walk. Swift.

2. A man who looks heavy and clownish.

Begin thy carols then, thou vaunting slouch;

Be thine the oaken staff, or mine the pouch. Gay.

TO SLOUCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To have a downcast clownish look.

SLOVEN. n. f. [slouf, Dutch; yslyvn, Welsh, nasty, shabby.] A man indecently negligent of cleanliness; a man dirtily dressed.

The ministers came to church in handsome holiday apparel, and that himself did not think them bound by the law of God to go like slovens. Hooker.

Affect in things about thee cleanliness,
That all may gladly board thee as a flow'r;

Slovens take up their stock of noisomeness Beforehand, and anticipate their last hour. Herbert.

You laugh, half beau, half sloven, if I stand;
My wig half powder, and all snuff my band. Pope.

Their methods various, but alike their aim;
The sloven and the fopling are the same. Young.

SLO'VENLINESS. n. f. [from slovenly.] Indecent negligence of dress; neglect of cleanliness.

Slovenliness is the worst sign of a hard student, and civility the best exercise of the remiss; yet not to be exact in the phrase of compliment, or gestures of courtesy. Wotton.

SLO'VENLY. adj. [from sloven.] Negligent of dress; negligent of neatness; not neat; not cleanly.

Æsop at last found out a slovenly lazy fellow, lolling at his ease, as if he had nothing to do.

L'Estrange.

SLO'VENLY. adv. [from sloven.] In a coarse inelegant manner.

As I hang my clothes on somewhat slovenly, I no sooner went in but he frowned upon me. Pope.

SLO'VENTRY. n. f. [from sloven.] Dirtiness;
want of neatness.

Our gayness and our guilt are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field;
There's not a piece of feather in our host,
And time hath worn us into slovenry. Shakspeare.

SLOUGH. n. f. [sloug, Saxon.]

1. A deep miry place; a hole full of dirt.

The Scots were in a fallow field, whereinto the English could not enter, but over a cross ditch and a slough; in passing whereof many of the English horse were plunged, and some mired. Hayward.

The ways being foul, twenty to one
He's here stuck in a slough, and overthrown. Milt.

A carter had laid his waggon fast in a slough.
L'Estrange.

2. The skin which a serpent casts off at his periodical renovation.

Thy fates open their hands, let thy blood and spirit embrace them; and to inure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough, and appear fresh. Shakspeare.

When the mind is quicken'd
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move,
With casted slough, and fresh legerity. Shakspeare.

Oh let not sleep my closing eyes invade
In open plains, or in the secret shade,
When he, renew'd in all the speckled pride
Of pompous youth, has cast his slough aside;
And in his summer liv'ry rolls along Erect, and brandishing his forked tongue. Dryden.

The slough of an English viper, that is, the cuticula, they cast off twice every year, at spring and fall; the separation begins at the head, and is finished in twenty-four hours. Grew.

The body, which we leave behind in this visible world, is as the womb or slough from whence we issue, and are born into the other. Grew.

3. It is used by Shakspeare simply for the skin.

As the snake, roll'd in a flow'ry bank,
With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent. Henry vi.

4. The part that separates from a foul fore.
At the next dressing I found a slough come away with the dressings which was the furies. Wifeman.

TO SLOUGH. v. n. [from the noun.] To part from the sound flesh. A surgical term.

SLO'UGHY. adj. [from slough.] Miry;
boggy; muddy.

That custom should not be allowed, of cutting scraws in low grounds sloughy underneath, which turn into bog. Swift.

SLOW. adj. [slap, sloup, Saxon; steenw, Frisick.]

1. Not swift; not quick of motion; not speedy; not having velocity; wanting celerity.

Me thou think'st not slow,
Who since the morning hour set out from heav'n,
Where God resides, and on mid-day arriv'd
In Eden, distance inexpressible! Milton.

Where the motion is so slow as not to supply a constant train of fresh ideas to the senses, the sense of motion is lost. Locke.

2. Late; not happening in a short time.

These changes in the heav'ns, though slow, pro-duc'd

Like change on sea and land, sidereal blast. Milton.

3. Not ready; not prompt; not quick.

I am slow of speech, and a slow tongue. Exodus.
Mine ear shall not be slow, mine eye not shut.

Milton.

The slow of speech make in dreams unpremeditated harangues, or converse readily in languages that they are but little acquainted with. Addison.

For though in dreadful whirls we hung
High on the broken wave,

I knew thou wert not slow to hear,
Nor impotent to save. Addison.

4. Dull; inactive; tardish; sluggish.

Fix'd on defence, the Trojans are not slow
To guard their shore from an expected foe. Dryden.

5. Not hasty; acting with deliberation;
not vehement.

The Lord is merciful, and slow to anger.

Common Prayer.

He that is slow to wrath, is of great understanding.

Proverbs.

The politick and wise

Are slow things with circumspective eyes. Pope.

6. Dull; heavy in wit.

The blockhead is a slow worm. Pope.

SLOW, in compolition, is an adverb;

slowly.

This slow-pac'd soul, which late did cleave
T' a body, and went but, by the body's leave,
Twenty perchance or thirty mile a day,
Dispatches in a minute all the way
'Twixt heav'n and earth. Donne.

To the shame of slow endeavouring art

Thy easy numbers flow. Milton.

This day's death denounc'd, if aught I see,

Will prove no sudden but a slow-pac'd evil,

A long day's dying to augment our pain. Milton.

For eight slow-circling years by tempests tolt.

Pope.

Some demon urg'd

T' explore the fraud with guile oppos'd to guile,

Slow-pacing thrice around th' insidious pile. Pope.

TO SLOW. v. a. [from the adjective.] To omit by dilatoriness; to delay; to procrastinate. Not in use. The true word was forflow.

Now do you know the reason of this haste?

—I would I knew not why it should be slow'd.

Shakspeare.

SLO'WLY. adv. [from slow.]

1. Not speedily; not with celerity; not with velocity.

The gnome rejoicing bears her gifts away,
Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts to-day.

Pope.

2. Not soon; not early; not in a little time.

The poor remnant of human seed peopled their country again slowly, by little and little. Bacon.

Our fathers bent their painful industry

To check a monarchy that slowly grew;

But did not France or Holland's fate foresee,

Whose rising pow'r to swift dominion flew. Dryden.

We oft our slowly growing works impart,

While images reflect from art to art. Pope.

3. Not hastily; not rashly; as, he determines slowly.

4. Not promptly; not readily: as, he learns slowly.

5. Tardily; sluggishly.

The chapel of St. Laurence advances so very slowly, that 'tis not impossible but the family of Medicis may be extinct before their burial-place is finished. Addison.

SLO'WNESS. n. f. [from slow.]

1. Smallness of motion; not speed; want of velocity; absence of celerity or swiftness.

Providence hath confined these human hearts, that what any invention hath in the strep of its motion, is abated in the slowness of it; and what it hath in the extraordinary quickness of its motion, must be allowed for in the great strength that is required unto it. Wilkins.

Motion is the absolute mode of a body, but swiftness or slowness are relative ideas. Watts.

2. Length of time in which any thing acts or is brought to pass; not quickness.

- Tyrants use what art they can to increase the slowness of death. Hooker.
3. Dulness to admit conviction or affection. Christ would not heal their infirmities, because of the hardness and slowness of their hearts, in that they believed him not. Bentley.
4. Want of promptness; want of readiness.
5. Deliberation; cool delay.
6. Dilatoriness; procrastination.

SL'OWWORM. n. f. [slapým, Saxon.] The blind worm; a large viper, not mortal, scarcely venomous.

Though we have found formed snakes in the belly of the cæcilia, or slowworm, yet may the viper emphatically bear the name. Brown.

To SLU'BER. v. a. [probably from lubber.]

1. To do any thing lazily, imperfectly, or with idle hurry.

Nature shewed she doth not like men who slubber up matters of mean account. Sidney.

Bassanio told him, he would make some speed Of his return: he answer'd, do not so, Slubber not business for my sake. Shakspeare. As they are slubbered over, the malignity that remains will show itself in some chronick disease. Wifeman.

2. To stain; to daub. [This seems to be from slobber, slabber, or slaver.]

You must be content to slubber the gloss of your new fortunes with this more stubborn and boisterous expedition. Shakspeare.

3. To cover coarsely or carelessly. This is now not in use, otherwise than as a low colloquial word.

A man of secret ambitious ends, and proportionate counsels, smothered under the habit of a scholar, and slubbered over with a certain rude and clownish fashion, that had the semblance of integrity. Wotton.

SLU'BERDEGULLION. n. f. [I suppose a cant word without derivation.] A paltry, dirty, sorry wretch.

Quoth she, although thou hast deserv'd, Baste slubberdegullion, to be serv'd As thou didst vow to deal with me, If thou hadst got the victory. Hudibras.

SLUDGE. n. f. [I suppose from slough, Sax.] Mire; dirt mixed with water.

The earth I made a mere soft sludge or mud. Mortimer.

SLUG. n. f. [slug, Danish, and stock, Dutch, signify a glutton, and thence one that has the sloth of a glutton.]

1. An idler; a drone; a slow, heavy, sleepy, lazy wretch.

Fie! what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not! Shakspeare.

2. An hinderance; an obstruction.

Usury dulls and damps all improvements, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for this slug. Bacon.

3. A kind of slow creeping snail.

4. [plecg, a hammerhead, Sax.] A cylindrical or oval piece of metal shot from a gun.

When fractures are made with bullets or slugs, there the scalp and cranium are driven in together. Wifeman.

As, forc'd from wind-guns, lead itself can fly, And pond'rous slugs cut swiftly through the sky. Pope.

To SLUG. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie idle; to play the drone; to move slowly.

All he did was to deceive good knights, And draw them from pursuit of praise and fame, To slug in sloth and sensual delights, And end their days with ill-renewed shame. Fairy Queen.

He lay not all night slugging in a cabin under his mantle, but used commonly to keep others waking to defend their lives. Spenser.

One went slugging on with a thousand cares. L'Estrange.

SLU'GGARD. n. f. [from slug.] An idler; a drone; an inactive lazy fellow.

Cry mercy, lords, and watchful gentlemen, That you have ta'en a tardy sluggard here. Shakspeare.

This mightier sound shall make The dead to rise, And open tombs and open eyes, To the long sluggards of five thousand years. Cowley.

Up, up, says Avarice; thou snor'st again, Stretchest thy limbs, and yawn'st, but all in vain: The tyrant Lucre no denial takes; At his command th' unwilling sluggard wakes. Dryden.

The place is a censure of a profane and smutty passage in the Old Bachelor. Collier.

SNACK. n. f. [from snatch.] A share; a part taken by compact.

If the master gets the better on't, they come in for their snack. L'Estrange.

For four times talking, if one piece thou take,
That must be cantled, and the judge go snack. Dryden.

All my demurs but double his attacks;
At last he whispers, "Do, and we go snack." Pope.

SNA'COT. n. f. [acus, Lat.] A fish. *Ainsw.*SNA'FFLE. n. f. [snawel, Dutch, the nose.]

A bridle which crosses the nose.

The third o' th' world is yours, which with a snaffle

You may pace easy; but not such a wife. Shaksp.

Sooth him with praise;
This, from his weaning, let him well be taught,
And then betimes in a soft snaffle wrought. Dryd.

To SNA'FFLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To bridle; to hold in a bridle; to hold; to manage.

SNAG. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology or original.]

1. A jag, or sharp protuberance.

The one her other leg had lame,
Which with a staff, all full of little snags,
She did disport; and Impotence her name. F. Ry.

The coat of arms,
Now on a naked snag in triumph born,
Was hung on high. Dryden.

2. A tooth left by itself, or standing beyond the rest; a tooth, in contempt.

S N A

In China none hold women sweet,
Except their snags are black as jet:
King Chihu put nine queens to death,
Convict on statute, iv'ry teeth.

Prior.

SNA'GGED. } adj. [from snag.] Full of SNA'GGY. } snags; full of sharp pro-tuberances; shooting into sharp points.

His stalking steps are stay'd
Upon a snaggy oak, which he had torn
Out of his mother's bowels, and it made His mortal mace, wherewith his foemen he dis-may'd.

Spenser.

Naked men belabouring one another with snagged sticks, or dully falling together by the ears at fiftycuffs.

More.

SNAIL. n. f. [rægl, Saxon; snegel,
Dutch.]

1. A slimy animal which creeps on plants, some with shells on their backs; the emblem of slowness.

I can tell why a snail has a house.—Why?— Why, to put's head in; not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case.

Shakespeare.

Fearful commenting
Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snail-pac'd beggary.

Shakespeare.

The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder:
Snail slow in profit, but he sleeps by day
More than the wild cat.

Shakespeare.

Seeing the snail, which every where doth roam,
Carrying his own house still, still is at home,
Follow, for he is easy-pac'd, this snail
Be thine own palace, or the world's thy goal.

Donne.

There may be as many ranks of beings in the invisible world superior to us, as we ourselves are superior to all the ranks of being beneath us in this visible world, even though we descend below the snail and the oyster.

Watts.

2. A name given to a drone, from the slow motion of a snail.

Why prat'f't thou to thyself, and answer'f't not?
Dromio, thou drone, thou snail, thou slug, thou sot!

Shakespeare.

SNAIL-CLAVER or Snail-trefoil. n. f. [trefo-lium. Lat.] An herb.

Ainsw.

SNAKE. n. f. [ræca, Sax. snake, Dutch.]
A serpent of the oviparous kind, distinguished from a viper. The snake's bite is harmless. Snake in poetry is a general name for a serpent.

Glo'ster's shew beguiles him;
As the snake, rolled in a flow'ry bank,
With shining chequer'd slough, doth sting a child,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent.

Shaksp.

We have scotch'd the snake, not kill'd it:
She'll close, and be herself; whilst our poor malice
Remains in danger of her former teeth.

Shakespeare.

The parts must have their outlines in waves, resembling the gliding of a snake upon the ground:
they must be smooth and even.

Dryden.

Nor chalk, nor crumbling stones, the food of snakes,

That work in hollow earth their winding tracks.

Dryden.

SNA'KEROOT. n. f. [snake and root.] A species of birthwort growing in Virginia and Carolina.

SNA'KESHEAD Iris. n. f. [hermodactylus,
Latin.] A plant.

The characters are: it hath a lily-shaped flower, of one leaf, shaped exactly like an iris; but has a tuberoso root, divided into two or three dug, like oblong bulbs.

Miller.

SNA'KEWEED or Bisfort. n. f. [bisforta,
Latin.] A plant.

SNA'KEWOOD. n. f. [from snake and wood.]
What we call snakewood is properly the smaller branches of the root of a tall straight tree growing in the island of Timor, and other parts of the East.
It has no remarkable smell; but is of an intensely bitter taste. The Indians are of opinion, that it is a certain remedy for the bite of the hooded serpent, and from thence its name of lignum colubrinum, or snakewood. We very seldom use it.

Hill.

SNA'KY. adj. [from snake.]

1. Serpentine; belonging to a snake; resembling a snake.

Venomous tongue, tipt with vile adder's sting,
Of that self kind with which the furies fell
Their snaky heads do comb.

Spenser.

The crooked arms Meander bow'd with his so snaky flood,

Resign'd for conduct the choice youth of all their mortal brood.

Chapman.

The true lovers knot had its original from nodus Herculeus, or Hercules's knot, resembling the snaky complication in the caduceus, or rod of Hermes.

Brown.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs
His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles.

Milton.

2. Having serpents.

Look, look unto this snaky rod,
And stop your ears against the charming god.

Ben Jonson.

In his hand
He took caduceus, his snaky wand.

Hub. Tale.

What was that snaky-headed gorgon shield
That wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin!
Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone?

Milton.

His flying hat was fasten'd on his head;
Wings on his heels were hung, and in his hand
He holds the virtue of the snaky wand.

Dryden.

To SNAP. v. a. [the same with knap.]

1. To break at once; to break short.

If the chain of necessity be no stronger, but that it may be snapped so easily in sunder; if his will was no otherwise determined from without himself, but only by the signification of your desire, and my modest intreaty, then we may conclude, human affairs are not always governed by absolute necessity.

Bramhall against Hobbes.

Light is broken like a body, as when 'tis snap- ped in pieces by a tougher body.

Digby.

Dauntless as death, away he walks;
Breaks the doors open, snaps the locks;
Searches the parlour, chamber, study,
Nor stops till he has culprit's body.

Prior.

2. To strike with a knocking noise, or sharp sound.

The bowzy fire
First shook from out his pipe the seeds of fire,
Then snapt his box.

Dunciad.

3. To bite.

A gentleman passing by a coach, one of the horses snapt off the end of his finger.

Wiseman.

All mungrel curs bawl, snarl, and snap, where the foe flies before him.

L'Estrange.

A notion generally received, that a lion is dangerous to all women who are not virgins, may have given occasion to a foolish report, that my lion's jaws are so contrived as to snap the hands of any of the female sex, who are not thus qualified.

Addison.

He snaps deceitful air with empty jaws,
The subtle hare darts swift beneath his paws.

Gay.

4. To catch suddenly and unexpectedly.

Sir Richard Graham tells the marquis he would snap one of the kids, and make some shift to carry him close to their lodgings.

Wotton.

Some with a noise and greasy light
Are snapt, as men catch larks at night.

Butler.

You should have thought of this before you was taken; for now you are in no danger to be snapt fingering again.

L'Estrange.

Did I not see you, rascal, did I not,
When you lay snug to snap young Damon's goat?

Dryden.

Belated seem on watch to lie,
And snapp some cully passing by.

Swift.

5. [snappen, Dutch.] To treat with sharp language.

Capoch'd your rabbins of the synod,
And snapp'd their canons with a why not.

Hudibras.

A furly ill-bred lord,
That chides and snaps her up at every word.

Granville.

To SNAP. v. n.

1. To break short; to fall asunder; to break without bending.

S N A

Note the ship's sicknesses; the mast
Shak'd with an ague, and the hold and waift
With a salt droply clogg'd; and our tacklings
Snapping, like to too high-stretch'd treble strings.

Donne.

The backbone is divided into so many vertebres for commodious bending, and not one intire rigid bone, which, being of that length, would have been often in danger of snapping in sunder.

Ray.

If your steel be too hard, that is, too brittle, if it be a spring, it will not bow; but with the least bending it will snap asunder.

Moxon.

The makers of these needles should give them a due temper: for if they are too soft, they will bend;
and if they are too brittle, they snap.

Sharp.

2. To make an effort to bite with eagerness.

If the young dace be a bait for the old pike, I see no reason but I may snap at him.

Shakespeare.

We snap at the bait without ever dreaming of the hook that goes along with it.

L'Estrange.

Towzer snaps

At people's heels with frothy chaps.

Swift.

SNAP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of breaking with a quick motion.

2. A greedy fellow.

He had no sooner said out his say, but up rises a cunning snap, then at the board.

L'Estrange.

3. A quick eager bite.

With their bills, thwarted crosswise at the end, they would cut an apple in two at one snap.

Carew.

4. A catch; a theft.

SNA'PDRAGON or Calf's Snout. n. f. [antirrhinum, Latin.]

1. A plant.

2. A kind of play, in which brandy is set on fire, and raisins thrown into it, which those who are unused to the sport are afraid to take out; but which may be safely snatched by a quick motion, and put blazing into the mouth, which being closed, the fire is at once extinguished.

SNA'PPER. n. f. [from snap.] One who snaps.

My father named me Autolienus, being letter'd under Mercury; who, as I am, was likewise a snapper up of unconsider'd trifles.

Shakespeare.

SNA'PPISH. adj. [from snap.]

1. Eager to bite.

The snappish cur, the passenger's annoy,
Close at my heel with yelping treble flies.

Swift.

They lived in the temple; but were such snappish
curs, that they frighted away most of the votaries.

Spekator.

2. Peevish; sharp in reply.

SNA'PPISHLY. adv. [from snappish.]
Peevishly; tartly.

SNA'PPISHNESS. n. f. [from snappish.]
Peevishness; tartness.

SNA'PSACK. n. f. [snappsack, Swedish.] A soldier's bag: more usually knapsack.

SNARE. n. f. [snara, Swedish and Islandick;
snare, Danish; snoor, Dutch.]

1. Any thing set to catch an animal; a gin; a net; a noose.

O poor hapless nightingale, thought I,
How sweet thou sing'st, how near the deadly snare!

Milton.

2. Any thing by which one is entrapped or entangled.

This I speak for your own profit, not that I may cast a snare upon you.

1. Corinthians.

A fool's mouth is his destruction, and his lips are the snare of his soul.

Proverbs.

Propound to thyself a constant rule of living, which, though it may not be fit to observe scrupulously, lest it become a snare to thy conscience, or endanger thy health, yet let not thy rule be broken.

Taylor.

For thee ordain'd a help, became thy snare.

Milton.

S N A

Beauty, wealth, and wit,
And prowess, to the pow'r of love submit;
The spreading snare for all mankind is laid,
And lovers all betray, or are betray'd. Dryden.

To SNARE. v. a. [from the noun.] To entrap; to entangle; to catch in a noose.

Gloster's shew
Beguiles him, as the mournful crocodile
With sorrow snarcs relenting passengers. Shakspeare.
The wicked is snared in the work of his own hands. Psalms.

Warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth, lest that too heav'nly form, pretended
To hellish falsehood, snare them. Milton.

To SNARL. v. n. [snarren, Dutch.]

1. To growl as an angry animal; to gnarl.

What! were you snarling all before I came,
Ready to catch each other by the throat,
And turn you all your hatred now on me? Shakspeare.
He is born with teeth!
And so I was; which plainly signified
That I should snarl, and bite, and play the dog. Shakspeare.

Now, for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty,
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarlets in the gentle eyes of peace. Shakspeare.
The shes even of the savage herd are safe;
All, when they snarl or bite, have no return
But courtship from the male. Dryden.

An angry cur
Snarls while he feeds. Dryden and Lee.

2. To speak roughly; to talk in rude terms.

'Tis malicious and unmanly to snarl at the little lapses of a pen, from which Virgil himself stands not exempted. Dryden.

The honest farmer and his wife,
Two years declin'd from prime of life,
Had struggled with the marriage noose,
As almost ev'ry couple does:
Sometimes my plague! sometimes my darling!
Kissing to-day, to-morrow snarling. Prior.

Where hast thou been snarling odious truths, and entertaining company with discourse of their diseases? Congreve.

To SNARL. v. a. To entangle; to embarrass. I know not that this sense is well authorized.

Confused snarled consciences render it difficult to pull out thread by thread. Decay of Piety.

SNARLER. n. s. [from snarl.] One who snarls; a growling, furly, quarrelsome, insulting fellow.

Should stupid libels grieve your mind,
You soon a remedy may find;
Lie down obscure, like other folks,
Below the lash of snarlers jokes. Swift.

SNARY. adj. [from snare.] Entangling; insidious.

Spiders in the vault their snary webs have spread. Dryden.

SNAST. n. s. The snuff of a candle.

It first burned fair, till some part of the candle was consumed, and the sawdust gathered about the snast; but then it made the snast big and long, and burn duskiſhly, and the candle wasted in half the time of the wax pure. Bacon.

To SNATCH. v. a. [snacken, Dutch.]

1. To seize any thing hastily.

A virtuous mind should rather wish to depart this world with a kind of treatable dissolution, than to be suddenly cut off in a moment; rather to be taken than snatched away from the face of the earth. Hooker.

Death,
So snatch'd, will not exempt us from the pain. Milton.

Life's stream hurries all too fast:
In vain sedate reflections we would make,
When half our knowledge we must snatch, not take. Pope.

She snatch'd a sheet of Thule from her bed:
Sudden she lies, and whelms it o'er the pyre;
Down sink the flames. Pope.

S N E

They, sailing down the stream,
Are snatch'd immediate by the quick'd-eyed trout,
Or darting salmon. Thomson.

2. To transport or carry suddenly.

He had scarce performed any part of the office of a bishop in the diocese of London, when he was snatched from thence, and promoted to Canterbury. Clarendon.

O nature!
Inrich me with the knowledge of thy works,
Snatch me to heaven. Thomson.

To SNATCH. v. n. To bite or catch eagerly at something.

Lords will not let me: if I had a monopoly of fool, they would have part on't; nay, the ladies too will be snatching. Shakspeare.

He shall snatch on the right hand, and be hungry. Isaiah.

Lycus, swifter of his feet,
Runs, doubles, winds and turns, amidst the war;
Springs to the walls, and leaves his foes behind,
And snatches at the beam he first can find. Dryden.

SNATCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A hasty catch.

2. A short fit of vigorous action.

After a shower to weeding a snatch;
More easily weed with the root to dispatch. Tusser.

3. A small part of any thing; a broken part.

She chaunted snatches of old tunes,
As one incapable of her own distress. Shakspeare.
In this work attempts will exceed performances, it being composed by snatches of time, as medical vacations would permit. Brown.

4. A broken or interrupted action; a short fit.

The snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking, were as his. Shakspeare.
They move by fits and snatches; so that it is not conceivable how they conduce unto a motion, which, by reason of its perpetuity, must be regular and equal. Wilkins.

We have often little snatches of sunshine and fair weather in the most uncomfortable parts of the year. Spectator.

5. A quip; a shuffling answer.

Come, leave your snatches, yield me a direct answer. Shakspeare.

SNA'TCHER. n. s. [from snatch.] One that snatches, or takes any thing in haste.

They of those marches Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers.
—We do not mean the courting snatches only,
But fear the main intendment of the Scot. Shakspeare.

SNA'TCHINGLY. adv. [from snatching.]
Hastily; with interruption.

To SNEAK. v. n. [snican, Saxon; snige, Danish.]

1. To creep sily; to come or go as if afraid to be seen.

Once the eagle, England, being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weazel, Scot,
Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs. Shakspeare.

Sneak not away, fir; for the friar and you Must have a word anon: lay hold on him. Shakspeare.
Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd behind the fence, and sneak'd away. Dryden.

I ought not to turn my back, and to sneak off in silence, and leave the truth to lie baffled, bleeding, and slain. Watts.

He sneak'd into the grave,
A monarch's half, and half a harlot's slave. Dunciad.

Are you all ready? Here's your musick here:
Author, sneak off; we'll tickle you, my dear. More.

2. To behave with meanness and servility;
to crouch; to truckle.

I need salute no great man's threshold, sneak to none of his friends to speak a good word for me to my conscience. South.

Nothing can support minds drooping and sneak-

S N E

ing, and inwardly reproaching them, from sense of their own guilt, but to see others as bad. Saunders.

When int'rest calls off all her sneaking train,
When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain,
She waits, or to the scaffold, or the cell,
When the last ling'ring friend has bid farewell. Pope.

Tom struts a soldier, open, bold, and brave;
Will sneaks a scriv'ner, an exceeding knave. Pope.

SNEAKER. n. s. A small vessel of drink.
I have just left the right worshipful and his myrmidons about a sneaker of five gallons. Spectator.

SNEAKING. participial adj. [from sneak.]

1. Servile; mean; low.

When the smart dialogue grows rich,
With sneaking dog, and ugly bitch. Rowe.

2. Covetous; niggardly; meanly parsimonious.

SNEAKINGLY. adv. [from sneaking.]

1. Meanly; servilely.

Do all things like a man, not sneakingly:
Think the king sees thee still. Herbert.
While you sneakingly submit,
And beg our pardon at our feet,
Discourag'd by your guilty fears
To hope for quarter for your ears. Hudibras.

2. In a covetous manner.

SNEAKINGNESS. n. s. [from sneaking.]

1. Niggardliness.

2. Meanness; pitifulness.

SNEAKUP. n. s. [from sneak.] A cowardly, creeping, insidious scoundrel. Obsolete.

The prince is a jack, a sneakup; and if he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would say so. Shakspeare.

To SNEAP. v. a. [This word seems a corruption of snib, or of snap, to reprimand. Perhaps snap is in that sense from snib, snibbe, Danish.

Men shulde him snibbe bitterly. Chaucer.]

1. To reprimand; to check.

2. To nip.

What may
Breed upon our absence, may there blow
No sneaping winds at home. Shakspeare.

SNEAP. n. s. [from the verb.] A reprimand; a check.

My lord, I will not undergo this sneap without reply: you call honourable boldness impudent sauciness; if a man will court'ly and say nothing, he is virtuous. Shakspeare.

To SNEB. v. a. [properly to snib. See SNEAP.] To check; to chide; to reprimand.

Which made this foolish briar wax so bold,
That on a time he cast him to scold
And snebbe the good oak, for he was old. Spenser.

To SNEER. v. n. [This word is apparently of the same family with snore and snort.]

1. To show contempt by looks: nasosuspendere adunco.

2. To insinuate contempt by covert expressions.

The wolf was by, and the fox in a sneering way advised him not to irritate a prince against his subjects. L'Estrange.

I could be content to be a little sneered at in a line, for the sake of the pleasure I should have in reading the rest. Pope.

If there has been any thing expressed with too much severity, it will fall upon those sneering or daring writers of the age against religion, who have lost reason and decency. Watts.

3. To utter with grimace.

I have not been sneering fulsome lies, and nauseous flattery, at a little tawdry whore. Congreve.

4. To show awkward mirth.

I had no power over one muscle in their faces, though they sneered at every word spoken by each other. Taylor.

SNEER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A look of contemptuous ridicule.

Did not the sneer of more impartial men
At sense and virtue, balance all agen? Pope.

2. An expression of ludicrous scorn.

Socrates or Cæsar might have a fool's coat clapt upon them, and in this disguise neither the wisdom of the one, nor the majesty of the other, could secure them from a sneer. Watts.

SNE'ERER. n. f. [from sneer.] He that sneers or shows contempt.

To SNEEZE. v. n. [nieran, Saxon; niesen, Dutch.] To emit wind audibly
by the nose.

If one be about to sneeze, rubbing the eyes till tears run will prevent it; for that the humour descending to the nostrils is diverted to the eyes.
Bacon.

If the pain be more intense and deeper within,
amongst the membranes, there will be an itching in the palate and nostrils, with frequent sneezing.
Wifeman.

To thee Cupid sneez'd aloud;
And every lucky omen sent before,
To meet thee landing on the Spartan shore. Dryden.

If any thing oppresses the head, it hath a power to free itself by sneezing. Ray.

Violent sneezing produceth convulsions in all the muscles of respiration: so great an alteration can be produced only by the tickling of a feather; and if the action of sneezing should be continued by some very acrid substance, it will produce headach, universal convulsions, fever, and death. Arbutnot.

An officer put the sharp end of his half-pike a good way up into my nostril, which tickled my nose like a straw, and made me sneeze violently.
Swift.

SNEEZE. n. f. [from the verb.] Emission of wind audibly by the nose.

I heard the rack,
As earth and sky would mingle; but These flaws, though mortals fear them,
As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Are to the main as wholesome as a sneeze
To man's less universe, and soon are gone.
Milton.

We read in Godignus, that upon a sneeze of the emperor of Monomotapa, there passed acclamations successively through the city. Brown.

SNE'EZEWORD. n. f. [ptarmica, Latin.] A plant.

SNET. n. f. [among hunters.] The fat of a deer. Dict.

SNEW. The old preterit of To snow. Dict.

To SNIB. v. a. [snibbe, Danish. See SNEAP.] To check; to nip; to reprimand.

Asked for their pass by every squib,
That list at will them to revile or snib. Hub.Tale.

SNICK and snee. n. f. A combat with knives.

Among the Dunkirkers, where snick and snee was in fashion, a boatswain, with some of our men drinking together, became quarrelsome: one of our men beat him down; then kneeling upon his breast, he drew out a knife, sticking in his fath, and cut him from the ear towards the mouth. Wifeman.

To SNICKER or Snigger. v. n. To laugh silly, wantonly, or contemptuously; to laugh in one's sleeve. Dict.

To SNIFF. v. n. [sniffa, Swedish.] To draw breath audibly up the nose.

So then you look'd scornful, and snift at the dean,
As who should say, Now am I skinny and lean?
Swift.

To SNI'GGLE. v. n.

Sniggling is thus performed: in a warm day,
when the water is lowest, take a strong small hook, tied to a string about a yard long; and then into one of the holes, where an eel may hide herself, with the help of a short stick put in your bait leisurely, and as far as you may conveniently: if within the sight of it, the eel will bite instantly, and as certainly gorge it: pull him out by degrees. Walton.

To SNIP. v. a. [snippen, Dutch.] To cut at once with scissars.

The sinus should be lain open, which was snipt up about two inches with a pair of probe-scissars, and the incised lips dressed. Wifeman.

When tradesmen brought extravagant bills, sir
Roger used to bargain to cut off a quarter of a yard:
he wore a pair of scissars for this purpose, and would snip it off nicely. Arbutnot.

Putting one blade of the scissars up the gut, and the other up the wound, snip the whole length of the fistula. Sharp.

SNIP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A single cut with scissars.

What! this a sleeve?
Here's snip and nip, and cut, and slash and slash,
Like to a censor in a barber's shop. Shakspeare.

The ulcer would not cure farther than it was laid open; therefore with one snip more I laid it open to the very end. Wifeman.

2. A small shred.

Those we keep within compass by small snips of emplast, hoping to defend the parts about; but, in spite of all, they will spread farther. Wifeman.

3. A share; a snack. A low word.

He found his friend upon the mending hand, which he was glad to hear, because of the snip that he himself expected upon the dividend. L'Estrange.

SNIPER. n. f. [sneppe, German; snite,
Sax. ysnit, Welsh.]

1. A small fen fowl with a long bill.

The external evident causes of the atra bilis are a high fermenting diet; as old cheese, birds feeding in fens, as geese, ducks, woodcocks, snipes, and swans. Floyer.

2. A fool; a blockhead.

Thus do I ever make my fool my purse;
For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,
If I should time expend with such a snipe,
But for my sport and profit. Shakspeare.

SNIPPER. n. f. [from snip.] One that snips.

SNIPPET. n. f. [from snip.] A small part;
a share.

Witches simpling, and on gibbets
Cutting from malefactors snippets;
Or from the pill'ry tips of ears. Hudibras.

SNIPSNAP. n. f. [a cant word formed by reduplication of snap.] Tart dialogue, with quick replies.

Dennis and dissonance, and captious art,
And snipsnap short, and interruption smart. Pope.

SNITE. n. f. [snita, Saxon.] A snipe.

This is perhaps the true name; but snipe prevails.

Of tame birds Cornwall hath doves, geese, and ducks: of wild, quail, rail, snite, and wood-dove.
Carew.

To SNITE. v. a. [snytan, Saxon.] To blow the nose.

Nor would any one be able to snite his nose, or to sneeze; in both which the passage of the breath through the mouth, being intercepted by the tongue, is forced to go through the nose. Grew.

SNIVEL. n. f. [snavel, snewel, Germ.]
Snot; the running of the nose.

To SNIVEL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run at the nose.

2. To cry as children.

Funeral tears are hired out as mourning cloaks;
and whether we go to our graves snivelling or singing, 'tis all mere form. L'Estrange.

Away goes he snivelling and yelping, that he had dropt his axe into the water. L'Estrange.

SNIVELLER. n. f. [from snivel.] A weeper; a weak lamenter.

He'd more lament when I was dead,
Than all the snivellers round my bed. Swift.

To SNORE. v. n. [snorcken, Dutch.] To breathe hard through the nose, as men in sleep.

I did unreverently blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou snores for thyself.
Ben Jonson.

Whose railing heroes, and whose wounded gods,
Makes some suspect he snores as well as nods.
Roscommon.

He may lie in his shades, and snores on to doom-day for me; unless I see farther reason of disturbing his repose. Stillingfleet.

Is not yonder Proteus' cave?

It is; and in it lies the god asleep;

And snoring by

We may delcry

The monsters of the deep. Dryden.

The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,

Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den,
Belching raw gobbets from his maw, o'ercharg'd
With purple wine and cruddled gore confus'd.
Addison.

SNORE. n. f. [snona, Saxon, from the verb.] Audible respiration of sleepers through the nose.

The surfeited grooms

Do mock their charge with snores: I've drugg'd their posslets. Shakspeare.

SNO'RER. n. f. [from snores.] He that snores.

To SNORT. v. n. [snorcken, Dutch.] To blow through the nose as a high-mettled horse.

The snorting of his horses was heard.

The fiery war-horse paws the ground,

And snorts and trembles at the trumpet's sound.
Addison.

From their full racks the gen'rous steeds retire,
Dropping ambrosial foams, and snorting fire.
Addison.

He with wide nostrils, snorting, skims the wave.
Thomson.

SNOT. n. f. [snote, Sax. snut, Dutch.]
The mucus of the nose.

Thus, when a greedy sloven once has thrown
His snut into the mess, 'tis all his own. Swift.

SNOTTY. adj. [from snut.] Full of snot.
This squire South my husband took in a dirty snotty-nose boy. Arbutnot.

SNOUT. n. f. [snuyt, Dutch.]

1. The nose of a beast.

His nose in the air, his snout in the skies.

In shape a beagle's whelp throughout,
With broader forehead, and a sharper snout.
Dryden.

2. The nose of a man, in contempt.

Her subtle snout

Did quickly wind his meaning out. Hudibras.

But when the date of Nock was out,

Off dropt the sympathetick snout. Hudibras.

What Æthiop lips he has,

How foul a snout, and what a hanging face!

Dryden.

Charm'd with his eyes, and chin, and snout,

Her pocket-glass drew silyly out;

And grew enamour'd with her phiz,

As just the counterpart of his. Swift.

3. The nosel or end of any hollow pipe.

SNO'UTED. adj. [from snout.] Having a snout.

Their dogs snouted like foxes, but deprived of that property which the logicians call proprium quarto modo, for they could not bark. Heylin.

Snouted and tailed like a boar, and footed like a goat. Grew.

SNOW. n. f. [snap, Sax. snee, Dutch.]

The small particles of water frozen before they unite into drops. Locke.

Drought and heat consume snow waters.

He gives the winter's snow her airy birth,

And bids her virgin fleeces clothe the earth.
Sandys.

Soft as the fleeces of descending snows. Pope.

To SNOW. v. n. [snapan, Sax. sneeuwen,
Dutch.] To fall in snow.

The hills being high about them, it snows at the tops of them oftener than it rains. Brown.

To SNOW. v. a. To scatter like snow.

If thou be'st born to see strange sights,
Ride ten thousand days and nights,
Till age snov white hairs on thee.

SNOWBALL. n. f. [snow and ball.] A round lump of congelated snow.

They passed to the east-riding of Yorkshire, their company daily increasing, like a snowball in rolling.

His bulky folly gathers as it goes,
And, rolling o'er you, like a snowball grows.

A snowball having the power to produce in us the ideas of white, cold, and round, the powers, as they are in the snowball, I call qualities; and, as they are sensations in our understandings, ideas.

SNOWBROTH. n. f. [snow and broth.] Very cold liquor.

Angelo, a man whose blood
Is very snowbroth, one who never feels
The wanton stings and motions of the sense.

SNOWDEEP. n. f. [viola bulbosa, Latin.] An herb.

SNOWDROP. n. f. [narcissoleucoium, Lat.] An early flower.

When we tried the experiment with the leaves of those purely white flowers that appear about the end of winter, called snowdrops, the event was not much unlike that newly mentioned.

The little shape, by magick pow'r,
Grew less and less, contracted to a flow'r;
A flow'r, that first in this sweet garden smil'd,
To virgins sacred, and the snowdrop styl'd.

SNOW-WHITE. adj. [snow and white.] White as snow.

A snow-white bull shall on your shore be slain;
His offer'd entrails cast into the main.

SNOWY. adj. [from snow.]

1. White like snow.

So shews a snowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shews.

Now I see thy jolly train:
Snowy headed winter leads,
Spring and summer next succeeds;
Yellow autumn brings the rear;
Thou art father of the year.

The blushing ruby on her snowy breast
Render'd its panting whiteness more confest.

2. Abounding with snow.

These first in Crete

And Ida known; thence on the snowy top
Of cold Olympus rul'd the middle air.

As when the Tartar from his Russian foe,
By Astracan, over the snowy plains, Retires.

SNUB. n. f. [from snebbe, Dutch, a nose; or knubel, a joint of the finger.] A jag; a snag; a knot in wood.

Lifting up his dreadful club on high,
All arm'd with ragged snubs, and knotty grain,
Him thought at first encounter to have slain.

To SNUB. v. a. [rather To snib. See SNEAP, SNEB, SNIB.]

1. To check; to reprimand.

2. To nip.

Near the sea-shores, the heads and boughs of trees run out far to landward; but toward the sea are so snubbed by the winds, as if their boughs had been pared or shaven off.

To SNUB. v. n. [snuffen, Dutch.] To sob with convulsion.

To SNUDGE. v. n. [sniger, Danish.] To lie idle, close, or snug.

Now he will fight it out, and to the wars;
Now eat his bread in peace,
And snudge in quiet, now he scorns increase;
Now all day spares.

SNUFF. n. f. [snuf, Dutch, snout.]

1. Snout. In this sense it is not used.

2. The useless excrescence of a candle: whence maucher la chandelle.

My snuff and loathed part of nature should Burn itself out.

But dearest heart, and dearer image, stay!
Alas! true joys at best are dreams enough:
Though you stay here, you pass too fast away;
For even at first life's taper is a snuff.

If the liquor be of a close and glutinous consistency, it may burn without any snuff, as we see in camphire, and some other bituminous substances; and most of the ancient lamps were of this kind, because none have been found with such wicks.

3. A candle almost burnt out.

Lamentable!

To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace
I' th' dungeon by a snuff.

4. The fired wick of a candle remaining after the flame.

A torch, snuff, and all, goes out in a moment, when dipped in the vapour.

5. Resentment expressed by snifing; perverse resentment. Not used unless in low language.

What hath been seen

Either in snuffs or packings of the duke's,
Or the hard rain which both of them have borne Against the old kind king.

Jupiter took snuff at the contempt, and punished him: he sent him home again.

6. Powdered tobacco taken by the nose.

Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;
The gnomes direct, to ev'ry atom just,
The pungent grains of titillating dust.

To SNUFF. v. a. [snuffen, Dutch.]

1. To draw in with the breath.

A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air, against rain.

With delight he snuff'd the smell
Of mortal change on earth.

He snuffs the wind, his heels the sand excite;
But when he stands collected in his might,
He roars, and promises a more successful fight.

The youth,
Who holds the nearest station to the light,
Already seems to snuff the vital air,
And teans just forward in a shining spear.

My troops are mounted; their Numidian steeds
Snuff up the wind, and long to scour the desert.

2. To scent.

The cow looks up, and from afar can find
The change of heav'n, and snuffs it in the wind.

For thee the bulls rebellow through the groves,
And tempt the stream, and snuff their absent loves.

O'er all the blood-hound boasts superior skill,
To scent, to view, to turn, and boldly kill!
His fellows vain alarms reject with scorn,
True to the master's voice, and learned horn:
His nostrils oft, if ancient fame sing true,
Trace the fly felon through the tainted dew:
Once snuff'd, he follows with unalter'd aim,
Nor odours lure him from the chosen game;
Deep-mouth'd he thunders, and inflam'd he views,
Springs on relentless, and to death pursues.

3. To crop the candle.

The late queen's gentlewoman!

To be her mistress' mistress!
This candle burns not clear: 'tis I must snuff it,
And out it goes.

Against a communion-day our lamps should be dressed, our lights snuffed, and our religion more active.

You have got
An office for your talents fit,
To snuff the lights, and stir the fire,
And get a dinner for your hire.

To SNUFF. v. n.

1. To snort; to draw breath by the nose.
The fury fires the pack; they snuff, they vent,
And feed their hungry nostrils with the scent.

Says Humpus, fir, my master bad me pray
Your company to dine with him to-day:
He snuffs, then follows, up the stairs he goes;
Never pulls off his hat, nor cleans his shoes.

2. To snift in contempt.

Ye said, what a wearisome is it, and ye have snuffed at it.

SNUFFBOX. n. f. [snuff and box.] The box in which snuff is carried.

If a gentleman leaves a snuffbox on the table, and goes away, lock it up as part of your valu.

Sir Plume, of amber snuffbox justly vain,
And the nice conduct of a clouded cane.

SNUFFER. n. f. [from snuff.] He that snuffs.

SNUFFERS. n. f. [from snuff.] The instrument with which the candle is clipped.

When you have snuffed the candle, leave the snuffers open.

To SNUFFLE. v. n. [snuffelen, Dutch.]

To speak through the nose; to breathe hard through the nose.

A water-spaniel came down the river, shewing that he hunted for a duck; and with a snuffling grace, disdainful that his smelling force could not as well prevail through the water as through the air, waited with his eye to see whether he could ely the duck's getting up again.

Bagpipes of the loudest drones,
With snuffling broken-winded tones,
Whose blasts of air, in pockets shut,
Sound filthier than from the gut.

It came to the ape to deliver his opinion, who smelt and snuffed, and considered on't.

One clad in purple,
Eats and recites some lamentable rhyme,
Some senseless Phillis in a broken note,
Snuffling at nose, and croaking in his throat.

SNUFFLER. n. f. [from snuffle.] He that speaks through the nose.

To SNUG. v. n. [sniger, Dutch.] To lie close; to snudge.

There snugging well, he well appear'd content,
So to have done amiss, so to be shent.

As the loving couple lay snugging together, Venus, to try if the cat had changed her manners with her shape, turned a mouse loose into the chamber.

SNUG. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Close; free from any inconvenience, yet not splendid.

They spied a country farm,
Where all was snug, and clean, and warm;
For woods before, and hills behind,
Secur'd it both from rain and wind.

2. Close; out of notice.

Lie snug, and hear what criticks say.

3. Silly or insidiously close.

Did I not see you, rascal! did I not,
When you lay snug, to snap young Damon's goat

To SNUGGLE. v. n. [from snug.] To lie close; to lie warm.

So. adv. [rya, Saxon; soo, Dutch; so German.]

1. In like manner. It answers to as either preceding or following. Noting comparison.

As whom the fables feign of monstrous size,
Titanian or earthborn, that warr'd on Jove;
So stretch'd out huge in length the arch fiend lay.

'thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks Valombrosa, where th' Etrurian shades
h over-arch'd embow'r, so thick bestrewn ect and lost lay these. Milton.

'ir'd at first sight with what the muse imparts, earless youth we tempt the heights of arts;
pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
unt o'er the vales, and seem to tread the sky. Pope.

As into air the purer spirits flow,
d sep'rate from their kindred dregs below,
flew her soul to its congenial place. Pope.

o such a degree.
Why is his chariot so long in coming? Judges.
Can nothing great, and at the height, main so long, but its own weight ll ruin it? Or is 't blind chance at still desires new states t' advance? Ben Jonson.

Amoret, my lovely foe,
ll me where thy strength does lie,
Where the pow'r that charms us so,
thy soul, or in thy eye? Waller.
I viewed in my mind, so far as I was able, the pinning and progress of a rising world. Burnet.
Since then our Arcite is with honour dead,
hy should we mourn that he so soon is freed. Dryden.

Upon our first going into a company of strangers, benevolence or aversion rises towards several particular persons, before we have heard them speak, or much as know who they are. Spectator.

We think our fathers fools, so wise we're grown:
ur wiser sons, no doubt, will think us so. Pope.

In such a manner.
There's no such thing as that we beauty call,
is mere cozenage all;
or though some long ago
k'd certain colours mingled so and so, hat doth not tie me now from chusing new. Suckling.

We may be certain that man is not a creature at hath wings; because this only concerns the anner of his existence; and we, seeing what he , may certainly know that he is not so or so. Locke.

I shall minutely tell him the steps by which I as brought into this way; that he may judge wheher I proceeded rationally, if so be any thing in my ample is worth his notice. Locke.

This gentleman is a person of good sense, and nows that he is very much in sir Roger's esteem, that he lives in the family rather as a relation han dependent. Addison.

It is regularly answered by as or that,
but they are sometimes omitted.

So frown'd the mighty combatants, that hell Grew darker at their frown. Milton.

There is something equivalent in France and Scotland; so as 'tis a very hard calumny upon our foil to affirm that so excellent a fruit will not grow here. Temple.

In the same manner.

Of such examples add me to the roll;
Me easily indeed mine may neglect,
But God's propos'd deliverance not so. Milton.

To keep up the tutor's authority, use him with great respect yourself, and cause all your family to do so too. Locke.

According to the multifariousness of this immutability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

Thus; in this manner.

Not far from thence the mournful fields appear,
So call'd from lovers that inhabit there. Dryden.

Does this deserve to be rewarded so? Dryden.

Did you come here a stranger or a foe?
It concerns every man, with the greatest seriousness, to enquire into those matters, whether they be so or not. Tillotson.

No nation ever complained they had too broad,
too deep, or too many rivers; they understand better than so how to value those inestimable gifts of nature. Bentley.

So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain. Pope.

Whether this be from an habitual motion of the animal spirits, or from the alteration of the constitution by some more unaccountable way, this is certain, that so it is. Locke.

7. Therefore; for this reason; in consequence of this.

The god, though loth, yet was constrain'd t'obey:
For longer time than that no living wight
Below the earth might suffer'd be to stay:

So back again him brought to living light. Spenser.

Trafficke, or rove ye, and like theeves oppresse
Poor strange adventurers; exposing so

Your soules to danger, and your lives to wo? Chapman.

If he set industriously and sincerely to perform the commands of Christ, he can have no ground of doubting but it shall prove successful to him; and so all that he hath to do is, to endeavour by prayer, and use of the means, to qualify himself for this blessed condition. Hammond.

It leaves instruction, and so instructors, to the sobriety of the settled articles and rule of the church.
Holyday.

Some are fall'n, to disobedience fall'n;
And so from heav'n to deepest hell. Milton.

God makes him in his own image an intellectual creature, and so capable of dominion. Locke.

8. On these terms: noting a conditional petition; answered by as.

O goddess! tell what I would say,
Thou know'st it, and I feel too much to pray;
So grant my suit, as I enforce my might,
In love to be thy champion. Dryden.

Here then exchange we mutually forgiveness:
So may the guilt of all my broken vows,
My perjuries to thee be all forgotten;

As here my soul acquits thee of my death,
As here I part without an angry thought. Rowe.

So may kind rains their vital moisture yield,
And swell the future harvest of thy field. Pope.

9. Provided that; on condition that: modo.

Be not sad:
Evil into the mind of God or man
May come and go, so unprov'd, and leave
No spot or blame behind. Milton.

So the doctrine be but wholesome and edifying, though there should be a want of exactness in the manner of speaking or reasoning, it may be over-look'd. Atterbury.

Too much of love thy hapless friend has prov'd,
Too many giddy foolish hours are gone;
May the remaining few know only friendship:

So thou, my dearest, truest, best Alicia,
Vouchsafe to lodge me in thy gentle heart,
A partner there; I will give up mankind. Rowe.

10. In like manner: noting concession of one proposition and assumption of another;
answering to as.

As a war should be undertaken upon a just motive, so a prince ought to consider the condition he is in when he enters on it. Swift.

11. So sometimes returns the sense of a word or sentence going before, and is used to avoid repetition: as, the two brothers were valiant, but the eldest was more so; that is, more valiant. The French article le is often used in the same manner. This mode of expression is not to be used but in familiar language, nor even in that to be commended.

The fat with plenty fills my heart,
The lean with love makes me too so. Cowley.

Who thinks his wife is virtuous, though not so,
Is pleas'd and patient till the truth he know. Denham.

Not to admire is all the art I know
To make men happy, and to keep them so. Creech.

One may as well say, that the conflagration shall be only national, as to say that the deluge was so.
Burnet.

However soft within themselves they are,
To you they will be valiant by despair;
For having once been guilty, well they know,
To a revengeful prince they still are so. Dryden.

He was great ere fortune made him so. Dryden.

I laugh at every one, said an old cynick, who laughs at me. Do you so? replied the philosopher;
then you live the merriest life of any man in Athens.
Addison.

They are beautiful in themselves, and much more so in the noble language peculiar to that great poet.
Addison.

Common-place books have been long used by industrious young divines, and still continue so.
Swift.

As to his using ludicrous expressions, my opinion
is, that they are not so. Pope.

The blest to-day is as completely so,
As who began a thousand years ago. Pope.

12. Thus it is; this is the state.
How sorrow shakes him!

So, now the tempest tears him up by th' roots,
And on the ground extends the noble ruin. Dryden.

13. At this point; at this time.
When

With wild wood-leaves and weeds I ha' strew'd his grave,
And on it said a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep and sigh;
And, leaving so his service, follow you. Shakspeare.

14. It notes a kind of abrupt beginning;
well.

O, so, and had you a council
Of ladies too? Who was your speaker,
Madam? Ben Jonson.

15. It sometimes is little more than an ex-pletive, though it implies some latent or surd comparison. In French, si.
An astringent is not quite so proper, where relaxing
the urinary passages is necessary. Arbutnot.

16. A word of assumption; thus be it.
There is Percy; if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. Shakspeare.

I will never bear a base mind: if it be my destiny, so; if it be not, so. No man is too good to serve his prince. Shakspeare.

17. A form of petition.
Ready are th' appellant and defendant,
The armourer and his man, to enter the lists,
So please your highness to behold the fight. Shakspeare.

18. So much as. However much. This is, I think, an irregular expression.
So much as you admire the beauty of his verse,
his prose is full as good. Pope.

19. So so. An exclamation after some thing done or known. Corrupted, I think, from cesser.
I would not have thee linger in thy pain:
So so. Shakspeare.

So so; it works: now, mistress, sit you fast.
Dryden.

20. So so. [costi, cesti, Italian.] Indifferently; not much amiss nor well.
He's not very tall; yet for his years he's tall;
His leg is but so so, and yet 'tis well. Shakspeare.

Deliver us from the nauseous repetition of As
and So, which some so so writers, I may call them
so, are continually sounding in our ears. Felton.

21. So then. Thus then it is that; therefore.
So then the Volscians stand but as at first
Ready, when time shall prompt them to make road
Upon 's again. Shakspeare.

To a war are required a just quarrel, sufficient forces, and a prudent choice of the designs: so then,
I will first justify the quarrel, balance the forces,
and propound designs. Bacon.

To Soak. v. n. [rocian, Saxon.]

1. To lie steeped in moisture.
For thy conceit in soaking will draw in
More than the common blocks. Shakspeare.

2. To enter by degrees into pores.
Lay a heap of earth in great frosts upon a hollow vessel, putting a canvas between, and pour water upon it, so as to soak through; it will make a harder ice in the vessel, and less apt to dissolve than ordinarily. Bacon.

Rain, soaking into the strata which lie near the surface, bears with it all such moveable matter as occurs. Woodward.

3. To drink gluttonously and intemperately.
This is a low term.

4 L

They are beautiful in themselves, and much more so in the noble language peculiar to that great poet.
Addison.

Common-place books have been long used by industrious young divines, and still continue so.
Swift.

As to his using ludicrous expressions, my opinion
is, that they are not so. Pope.

The blest to-day is as completely so,
As who began a thousand years ago. Pope.

12. Thus it is; this is the state.
How sorrow shakes him!

So, now the tempest tears him up by th' roots,
And on the ground extends the noble ruin. Dryden.

13. At this point; at this time.
When

With wild wood-leaves and weeds I ha' strew'd his grave,
And on it said a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep and sigh;
And, leaving so his service, follow you. Shakspeare.

14. It notes a kind of abrupt beginning;
well.

O, so, and had you a council
Of ladies too? Who was your speaker,
Madam? Ben Jonson.

15. It sometimes is little more than an ex-pletive, though it implies some latent or surd comparison. In French, si.
An astringent is not quite so proper, where relaxing
the urinary passages is necessary. Arbutnot.

16. A word of assumption; thus be it.
There is Percy; if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. Shakspeare.

I will never bear a base mind: if it be my destiny, so; if it be not, so. No man is too good to serve his prince. Shakspeare.

17. A form of petition.
Ready are th' appellant and defendant,
The armourer and his man, to enter the lists,
So please your highness to behold the fight. Shakspeare.

18. So much as. However much. This is, I think, an irregular expression.
So much as you admire the beauty of his verse,
his prose is full as good. Pope.

19. So so. An exclamation after some thing done or known. Corrupted, I think, from cesser.
I would not have thee linger in thy pain:
So so. Shakspeare.

So so; it works: now, mistress, sit you fast.
Dryden.

20. So so. [costi, cesti, Italian.] Indifferently; not much amiss nor well.
He's not very tall; yet for his years he's tall;
His leg is but so so, and yet 'tis well. Shakspeare.

Deliver us from the nauseous repetition of As
and So, which some so so writers, I may call them
so, are continually sounding in our ears. Felton.

21. So then. Thus then it is that; therefore.
So then the Volscians stand but as at first
Ready, when time shall prompt them to make road
Upon 's again. Shakspeare.

To a war are required a just quarrel, sufficient
forces, and a prudent choice of the designs: so then,
I will first justify the quarrel, balance the forces,
and propound designs. Bacon.

To Soak. v. n. [rocian, Saxon.]

1. To lie steeped in moisture.
For thy conceit in soaking will draw in
More than the common blocks. Shakspeare.

2. To enter by degrees into pores.
Lay a heap of earth in great frosts upon a hollow
vessel, putting a canvas between, and pour water
upon it, so as to soak through; it will make a harder ice in the vessel, and less apt to dissolve than ordinarily. Bacon.

Rain, soaking into the strata which lie near the surface, bears with it all such moveable matter as occurs. Woodward.

3. To drink gluttonously and intemperately.
This is a low term.

4 L

Let a drunkard see that his health decays, his estate wastes, yet the habitual thirst after his cups drives him to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health and plenty; the least of which he confesses is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a soaking club.

Locke.

To SOAK. v. a.

1. To macerate in any moisture; to steep; to keep wet till moisture is imbibed; to drench.

Many of our princes
Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood;
So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes. Shakspeare.
Their land shall be soaked with blood. Isaiab.
There deep Galeus soaks the yellow sands. Dryden.

Wormwood, put into the brine you soak your corn in, prevents the birds eating it. Mortimer.

2. To draw in through the pores.

Thou, whose life's a dream of lazy pleasure:
'Tis all thy bus'ness, bus'ness how to shun;
To bask thy naked body in the sun,
Suppling thy stiffen'd joints with fragrant oil;
Then in thy spacious garden walk a while,
To suck the moisture up and soak it in. Dryden.

3. To drain; to exhaust. This seems to be a cant term, perhaps used erroneously for suck.

Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth, and soak and exhaust it, hurt all things that grow by them. Bacon.

A greater sparer than a savor; for though he had such means to accumulate, yet his forts, and his garrisons, and his feasting, wherein he was only sumptuous, could not but soak his exchequer. Wotton.

SO'AKER. n. s. [from soak.]

1. He that macerates in any moisture.
2. A great drinker. In low language.

SOAP. n. s. [rape, Saxon; sapo, Lat.] A substance used in washing, made of a lixivium of vegetable alkaline ashes and any unctuous substance.

Soap is a mixture of a fixed alkaline salt and oil; its virtues are cleansing, penetrating, attenuating, and resolving; and any mixture of any oily substance with salt may be called a soap. Arbutnot.

He is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers soap. Malachi.

A bubble blown with water, first made tenacious by dissolving a little soap in it, after a while will appear tinged with a great variety of colours. Newton.

Soap-earth is found in great quantity on the land near the banks of the river Hermus, seven miles from Smyrna. Woodward.

Soap-ashes are much commended, after the soap-boilers have done with them, for cold or sour lands. Mortimer.

As rain-water diminishes their salt, so the moistening of them with chamber-lee or soap-suds adds thereto. Mortimer.

SOAPBOILER. n. s. [soap and boil.] One whose trade is to make soap.

A soapboiler consoles with me on the duties on cattle-soap. Addison.

SO'APWORT. n. s. [japonaria, Lat.] A species of campion. Miller.

To SOAR. v. n. [forare, Italian.]

1. To fly aloft; to tower; to mount; properly to fly without any visible action of the wings. Milton uses it actively.

'Tis but a base ignoble mind
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar. Shakspeare.

Feather'd soon and fledg'd,
They summ'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublime,
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton.

2. To mount intellectually; to tower with the mind.

How high a pitch his resolution soars. Shakspeare.

Valour soars above

What the world calls misfortune and afflictions.

Addison.

3. To rise high.

Who aspires must down as low
As high he soar'd. Milton.
Flames rise and sink by fits; at last they soar
In one bright blaze, and then descend no more. Dryden.

When swallows fleet soar high, and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin would be clear. Gay.

SOAR. n. s. [from the verb.] Towering flight.

Within soar

Of tow'ring eagles, to all the fowls he seems A phoenix. Milton.

To SOB. v. n. [reob, complaining, Saxon. Perhaps it is a mere onomatopœia copied from the sound.] To heave audibly with convulsive sorrow; to sigh with convulsion.

When thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father's death,
He twenty times made pause to sob and weep. Shakspeare.

As if her life and death lay on his saying,
Some tears she shed; with sighs and sobblings mixt,
As if her hopes were dead through his delaying. Fairfax.

She sigh'd, she sob'd, and furious with despair,
She rent her garments, and she tore her hair. Dryden.

When children have not the power to obtain their desire, they will, by their clamour and sobbing, maintain their title to it. Locke.

I sob'd; and with faint eyes
Look'd upwards to the Ruler of the skies. Harte.

SOB. n. s. [from the verb.] A convulsive sigh; a convulsive act of respiration obstructed by sorrow.

Break, heart, or choak with sobs my hated breath;

Do thy own work, admit no foreign death. Dryden.
There oft are heard the notes of infant woe,
The short thick sob, loud scream, and shriller squall. Pope.

A wond'rous bag with both her hands she binds:
There she collects the force of female lungs,
Sighs, sobs, and passions, and the war of tongues. Pope.

To SOB. v. a. To soak. A cant word.

The tree being sobbed and wet, swells. Mortimer.

SO'BER. adj. [sobrius, Lat. sobre, Fr.]

1. Temperate, particularly in liquors; not drunken.

Live a sober, righteous, and godly life. Com. Pr.
The vines give wine to the drunkard as well as to the sober man. Taylor.

No sober temperate person, whatsoever other sins he may be guilty of, can look with complacency upon the drunkenness and sottishness of his neighbour. South.

2. Not overpowered by drink.

A law there is among the Grecians, whereof Pittacus is author; that he which being overcome with drink did then strike any man, should suffer punishment double as much as if he had done the same being sober. Hooker.

3. Not mad; right in the understanding.

Another, who had a great genius for tragedy, following the fury of his natural temper, made every man and woman in his plays stark raving mad: there was not a sober person to be had; all was tempestuous and blustering. Dryden.

No sober man would put himself into danger, for the applause of escaping without breaking his neck. Dryden.

4. Regular; calm; free from inordinate passion.

This same young sober blooded boy a man cannot make him laugh. Shakspeare.

Cieca travelled all over Peru, and is a grave and sober writer. Abbot.

Young men likewise exhort to be sober minded. Titus.

The governour of Scotland being of great courage, and sober judgment, amply performed his duty both before the battle and in the field. Hayward.

These confusions disposed men of any sober understanding to wish for peace. Clarendon.

Among them some sober men confessed, that as his majesty's affairs then stood, he could not grant it. Clarendon.

To these that sober race of men, whose lives Religious titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame
Ignobly to the trains and to the smiles
Of these fair atheists. Milton.

Be your designs ever so good, your intentions ever so sober, and your searches directed in the fear of God. Waterland.

5. Serious; solemn; grave.

Petruchio

Shall offer me, disguis'd in sober robes,
To old Baptista as a schoolmaster. Shakspeare.

Come, civil night,

Thou sober-suited matron, all in black. Shakspeare.

Twilight grey

Had in her sober liv'ry all things clad. Milton.

What parts gay France from sober Spain?

A little rising rocky chain:

Of men born south or north o' th' hill,

Those seldom move, these ne'er stand still. Prior.

For Swift and him despis'd the farce of state,

The sober follies of the wise and great. Pope.

See her sober over a fampler, or gay over a jointed baby. Pope.

To SO'BER. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make sober; to cure of intoxication.

A little learning is a dangerous thing;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring;
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely *sober*s us again. Pope.

SO'BERLY. adv. [from sober.]

1. Without intemperance.

2. Without madness.

3. Temperately; moderately.

Let any prince think soberly of his forces, except his militia of natives be valiant soldiers. Bacon.

4. Coolly; calmly.

Whenever children are chastised, let it be done without passion, and soberly, laying on the blows slowly. Locke.

SO'BERNESS. n. s. [from sober.]

1. Temperance in drink.

Keep my body in temperance, soberness, and chastity. Common Prayer.

2. Calmness; freedom from enthusiasm; coolness.

A person noted for his soberness and skill in spagyric preparations, made Helmont's experiment succeed very well. Boyle.

The soberness of Virgil might have shewn the difference. Dryden.

SOBRIETY. n. s. [from sobriété, Fr. sobrius, Latin.]

1. Temperance in drink; soberness.

Drunkenness is more uncharitable to the soul, and in scripture is more declaimed against, than gluttony; and sobriety hath obtained to signify temperance in drinking. Taylor.

2. Present freedom from the power of strong liquor.

3. General temperance.

In setting down the form of common prayer, there was no need that the book should mention either the learning of a fit, or the unsuitness of an ignorant, minister, more than that he which describeth the manner how to pitch a field, should speak of moderation and sobriety in diet. Hooker.

4. Freedom from inordinate passion.

The libertine could not prevail on men of virtue and sobriety to give up their religion. Regent.

5. Calmness; coolness.

Enquire, with all sobriety and severity, whether there be in the footsteps of nature any such transmission of immaterial virtues, and what the force of imagination is. Bacon.

Sobriety in our riper years is the effect of a well concocted warmth; but where the principles are only phlegm, what can be expected but an insipid manhood, and old infancy. Dryden.

If sometimes Ovid appears too gay, there is a secret gracefulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the stayedness and sobriety of age be wanting. Dryden.

6. Seriousness; gravity.

A report without truth; and, I had almost said, without any sobriety or modesty. Waterland.

Mirth makes them not mad;

Nor sobriety sad. Denham.

SOCCAGE. n. f. [soc, Fr. a ploughshare; soccagium, barbarous Latin.] A tenure of lands for certain inferior or husbandly services to be performed to the lord of the fee.

All services due for land being knight's service, or soccage; so that whatever is not knight's service, is soccage. This soccage is of three kinds; a soccage of free tenure, where a man holdeth by free service of twelve pence a-year for all manner of services. Soccage of ancient tenure is of land of ancient demesne, where no writ original shall be sued, but the writ secundum consuetudinem manerii. Soccage of base tenure is where those that hold it may have none other writ but the monstraverunt, and such socmen hold not by certain service. Cowell.

The lords are not holden at all of her majesty, or not holden in chief, but by a mean tenure in soccage, or by knight's service. Bacon.

SOCCAGER. n. f. [from soccage.] A tenant by soccage.

SO'CIABLE. adj. [sociable, Fr. sociabilis, Latin.]

1. Fit to be conjoined.

Another law toucheth them, as they are sociable parts united into one body; a law which bindeth them each to serve unto other's good, and all to prefer the good of the whole before whatsoever their own particular. Hooker.

2. Ready to unite in a general interest.

To make man mild and sociable to man;
To cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline. Addison.

3. Friendly; familiar; conversible.

Them thus employ'd behold
With pity heav'n's high King, and to him call'd
Raphael, the sociable spirit that deign'd
To travel with Tobias. Milton.

4. Inclined to company.

In children much solitude and silence I like not, nor any thing born before his time, as this must needs be in that sociable and exposed age. Wotton.

SO'CIABLENESS. n. f. [from sociable.]

1. Inclination to company and converse.

Such as would call her friendship love, and feign
To sociableness a name profane. Donne.

The two main properties of man are contemplation, and sociableness, or love of converse. More.

2. Freedom of conversation; good fellowship.

He always used courtesy and modesty, disliked of none; sometimes sociableness and fellowship, well liked by many. Hayward.

SO'CIABLY. adv. [from sociable.] Convertibly, as a companion.

Yet not terrible,

That I should fear; not sociably mild,
As Raphael, that I should much confide;
But solemn and sublime. Milton.

SO'CIAL. adj. [socialis, Latin.]

1. Relating to general or publick interest; relating to society.

To love our neighbour as ourselves, is such a fundamental truth for regulating human society, that by that alone one might determine all the cases in social morality. Locke.

True self-love and social are the same. Pope.

2. Easy to mix in friendly gayety; companionable.

Withers, adieu! yet not with thee remove Thy martial spirit or thy social love. Pope.

3. Consisting in union or converse with another.

Thou in thy secrecy although alone,
Best with thyself accompanied, seek't not Social communication. Milton.

SO'CIALNESS. n. f. [from social.] The quality of being social.

SOCIETY. n. f. [société, French; societas, Latin.]

1. Union of many in one general interest.

If the power of one society extend likewise to the making of laws for another society, as if the church could make laws for the state in temporals, or the state make laws binding the church relating to spirituals, then is that society entirely subject to the other. Lesley.

2. Numbers united in one interest; community.

As the practice of piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason, so is it for the interest of private persons and publick societies. Tillotson.

3. Company; converse.

To make society

The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself

Till supper-time alone. Shakspeare.

Whilst I was big in clamour, came there a man,

Who having seen me in my worser state,

Shunn'd my abhor'd society. Shakspeare.

Solitude is sometimes best society,

And short retirement urges sweet return. Milton.

4. Partnership; union on equal terms.

Among unequals what society can sort? Milton.

Heav'n's greatness no society can bear;

Servants he made, and those thou want'st not here. Dryden.

SOCK. n. f. [focus, Latin; rocc, Saxon; socke, Dutch.]

1. Something put between the foot and shoe.

Ere I lead this life long, I'll sow nether socks, and mend them, and foot them too. Shakspeare.

A physician, that would be mystical, prescribeth for the rheum to walk continually upon a camomile alley; meaning he should put camomile within his socks. Bacon.

2. The shoe of the ancient comick actors, taken in poems for comedy, and opposed to buskin or tragedy.

Then to the well-trod stage anon,

If Jonson's learned sock be on,

Or sweetest Shakspeare, fancy's child,

Warble his native wood-notes wild. Milton.

Great Fletcher never treads in buskin here,

Nor greater Jonson dares in socks appear;

But gentle Simkin just reception finds

Amidst the monument of vanish'd minds. Dryden.

On two figures of actors in the villa Mathei at Rome, we see the fashion of the old sock and larva. Addison.

SO'CKET. n. f. [souchette, French.]

1. Any hollow pipe; generally the hollow of a candlestick.

Two goodly beacons, set in watches stead,

Therein gave light, and flam'd continually;

For they of living fire most subtilly

Were made, and set in silver sockets bright. Fairy Queen.

She at your flames would soon take fire,

And like a candle in the socket

Diffolve. Hudibras.

The nightly virgin sees

When sparkling lamps their spitt'ring light advance,

And in the sockets oily bubbles dance. Dryden.

The stars amaz'd ran backward from the light,

And, shrunk within their sockets, lost their light. Dryden.

Two dire comets

In their own plague and fire have breath'd their last,

Or dimly in their sinking sockets frown. Dryden.

To nurse up the vital flame as long as the matter will last, is not always good husbandry; it is much better to cover it with an extinguisher of honour, than let it consume till it burns blue, and lies agonizing within the socket, and at length goes out in no perfume. Collier.

2. The receptacle of the eye.

His eye-balls in their hollow sockets sink;

Bereft of sleep, he loaths his meat and drink;

He withers at his heart, and looks as wan

As the pale spectre of a murder'd man. Dryden.

3. Any hollow that receives something inserted.

The sockets and supporters of flowers are figured; as in the five brethren of the rose, and sockets of gillyflowers. Bacon.

Gomphosis is the connection of a tooth to its socket. Wiseman.

As the weight leans wholly upon the axis, the grating and rubbing of these axes against the sockets wherein they are placed, will cause some inaptitude and resistency to that rotation of the cylinder which would otherwise ensue. Wilkins.

On either side the head produce an ear,

And sink a socket for the shining share. Dryden.

SO'CKETCHISEL. n. f. A stronger sort of chisel.

Carpenters, for their rougher work, use a stronger sort of chisels, and distinguish them by the name of socketchisels; their shank made with a hollow socket a-top, to receive a strong wooden sprig made to fit into the socket. Moxon.

SO'CLE. n. f. [with architects.] A flat square member under the bases of pedestals of statues and vases: it serves as a foot or stand. Bailey.

SO'CMAN or Soccager. n. f. [rocayman, Saxon.] A sort of tenant that holds lands and tenements by soccage tenure, of which there are three kinds. See SOCCAGE. Cowell.

SO'COME. n. f. [In the old law, and in Scotland.] A custom of tenants obliged to grind corn at their lord's mill. Bailey.

SOD. n. f. [soed, Dutch.] A turf; a clod.

The sexton shall green sods on thee bestow;

Alas! the sexton is thy banker now. Swift.

Here fame shall dress a sweeter sod

Than fancy's feet have ever trod. Collins.

SOD. The preterit of seethe.

Never caldron sod

With so much fervour, fed with all the store

That could enrage it. Chapman.

Jacob sod pottage. Genesis.

SODA'LITY. n. f. [sodalitas, Latin.] A fellowship; a fraternity.

A new confraternity was instituted in Spain, of the slaves of the Blessed Virgin, and this sodality established with large indulgencies. Stillingfleet.

SO'DDEN. [part. pass. of seeth.] Boiled; feethed.

Can sodden water, their barley broth,

Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat? Shakspeare.

Sodden business! there's a stew'd phrase indeed!

Shakspeare.

Thou sodden-witted lord, thou hast no more brain than I have in my elbows. Shakspeare.

Try it with milk sodden, and with cream. Bacon.

Mix it with sodden wines and raisins. Dryden.

To SO'DER. v. a. [souder, French; soude-ren, Dutch.] It is generally written solder, from solidare, Italian; solidare, Latin.] To cement with some metallick matter.

He that smootheeth with the hammer encourageth him that smote the anvil, saying, It is ready for sodering. Isaiab.

SO'DER. n. f. Metallick cement.

Still the difficulty returns, how these hooks were made: what is it that fastens this soder, and links these first principles of bodies into a chain? Collier.

SOE. n. f. [fae, Scottish.] A large wooden vessel with hoops, for holding water; a cowl.

A pump grown dry will yield no water; but pouring a little into it at first, for one basin-full you may fetch up as many soe-fulls. More.

SOE'VER. adv. [so and ever.] A word properly joined with a pronoun or adverb, as whosoever, whatsoever, howsoever.

S O F

What great thing soever a man proposed to do in his life, he should think of achieving it by fifty.
Temple.

What love soever by an heir is shown,
Or you could ne'er suspect my loyal love. Dryden.
SO'FA. n. f. [I believe an eastern word.]

A splendid seat covered with carpets.
The king leaped off from the sofa on which he sat,
and cried out, 'Tis my Abdallah! Guardian.

SOFT. adj. [root, Saxon; soft, Dutch,]
1. Not hard.

Hard and soft are names we give things, only in relation to the constitutions of our own bodies; that being called hard, which will put us to pain sooner than change figure, by the pressure of any part of our bodies; and that soft, which changes the situation of its parts upon an easy touch. Locke.

Some bodies are hard, and some soft: the hardness is caused by the jejuneness of the spirits, which, if in a greater degree, make not only hard, but fragile. Bacon.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt,
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

2. Not rugged; not rough.

What went you out to see? a man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft raiment are in kings houses. Matthew.

3. Ductile; not unchangeable of form.

Spirits can either fix assume; so soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure. Milton.

4. Facile; flexible; not resolute; yielding.

A few divines of so soft and servile tempers as disposed them to so sudden acting and compliance. King Charles.

One king is too soft and easy; another too fiery. L'Estrange.

5. Tender; timorous.

What he hath done famously, he did it to that end; though soft conscientious men can be content to say, it was for his country. Shakspeare.

However soft within themselves they are,
To you they will be valiant by despair. Dryden.

Curst be the verse, how well foe'er it flow,
That tends to make one worthy man my foe;
Give virtue scandal, innocence a fear,
Or from the soft-eyed virgin steal a tear. Pope.

6. Mild; gentle; kind; not severe.

Would my heart were flint, like Edward's;
Or Edward's soft and pitiful, like mine. Shakspeare.
Our torments may become as soft as now severe. Milton.

Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay;
His anger moral, and his wisdom gay. Pope.

7. Meek; civil; complaisant.

Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way, which thou dost confess
Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim,
In asking their good loves. Shakspeare.

8. Placid; still; easy.

On her soft axle while she paces even,
She bears thee soft with the smooth air along. Milton.

There, soft extended to the murmuring sound
Of the high porch, Ulysses sleeps profound. Pope.

9. Effeminate; vitiously nice.

This sense is also mistress of an art
Which to soft people sweet perfumes doth sell;
Though this dear art doth little good impart,
Since they smell best, that do of nothing smell. Davies.

An idle and soft course of life is the source of criminal pleasures. Broome.

10. Delicate; elegantly tender.

Her form more soft and feminine. Milton.
Less winning soft, less amiably mild. Milton.

11. Weak; simple.

The deceiver soon found this soft place of Adam's, and innocence itself did not secure him. Glanville.

12. Gentle; not loud; not rough.

Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle, and low; an excellent thing in women. Shakspeare.

S O F

The Dorian mood of flutes and soft recorders. Milton.

When some great and gracious monarch dies,
Soft whispers first, and mournful murmurs, rise
Among the sad attendants; then the sound
Soon gathers voice. Dryden.

Soft whispering thus to Nestor's son,
His head reclin'd, young Ithacus begun. Pope.

13. Smooth; flowing; not vehement; not rapid.

The solemn nightingale tun'd her soft lays. Milton.
Soft were my numbers; who could take offence,
When smooth description held the place of sense? Pope.

Hark! the numbers soft and clear
Gently steal upon the ear. Pope.

14. Not forcible; not violent.

Sleep falls with soft slumb'rous weight. Milton.

15. Mild; not glaring.

The sun shining upon the upper part of the clouds, made them appear like fine down or wool, and made the softest sweetest lights imaginable. Brown.

SOFT. interj. Hold; stop; not so fast.

But soft, I pray you; did king Richard then Proclaim my brother? Shakspeare.

Oh! come in, Æmilia;
Soft, by and by, let me the curtains draw. Shakspeare.

But soft, my muse; the world is wide,
And all at once was not desisted. Suckling.

TO SOFTEN. v. a. [from soft.]

1. To make soft; to make less hard.

Bodies, into which the water will enter, long seething will rather soften than indurate. Bacon.

Their arrow's point they soften in the flame,
And sounding hammers break its barbed frame. Gay.

2. To intenerate; to make less fierce or obstinate; to mollify.

I will soften itony hearts. Milton.
Our friends see not our faults, or conceal them, or soften them by their representation. Addison.
I would correct the harsh expressions of one party,
by softening and reconciling methods. Watts.

3. To make easy; to compose; to make placid; to mitigate; to palliate; to alleviate.

Call round her tomb each object of desire;
Bid her by all that cheers or softens life,
The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife. Pope.
Musick the fiercest griefs can charm;
Musick can soften pain to ease,
And make despair and madness please. Pope.

4. To make less harsh, less vehement, less violent.

He bore his great commission in his look,
But sweetly temper'd awe, and soften'd all he spoke. Dryden.

5. To make less glaring.

6. To make tender; to enervate.

TO SOFTEN. v. n.

1. To grow less hard.

Many bodies, that will hardly melt, will soften;
as iron in the forge. Bacon.

2. To grow less obdurate, cruel, or obstinate.

He may soften at the sight of the child;
The silence often of pure innocence
Persuades, when speaking fails. Shakspeare.

SOFTLY. adv. [from soft.]

1. Without hardness.

2. Not violently; not forcibly.

Solid bodies, if very softly percussed, give no sound; as when a man treadeth very softly upon boards. Bacon.

3. Not loudly.

Ahab rent his clothes, and went softly. 1 Kings.
In his dark silence softly leave the town,
And to the general's tent direct your steps. Dryden.

4. Gently; placidly.

Death will dismiss me,
And lay me softly in my native dust,
To pay the forfeit of ill-manag'd trust. Dryden.
She with a wreath of myrtle crowns his head,
And softly lays him on a flow'ry bed. Dryden.

S O I

5. Mildly; tenderly.

The king must die;
Though pity softly plead within my soul,
Yet he must die, that I may make you great. Dryden.

SOFTNER. n. f. [from soft.]

1. That which makes soft.

2. One who palliates.

Those softners and expedient-mongers shake their heads so strongly, that we can hear their pockets jingle. Swift.

SOFTNESS. n. f. [from soft.]

1. The quality of being soft; quality contrary to hardness.

Softness cometh by the greater quantity of spirits, which ever induce yielding and cession; and by the more equal spreading of the tangible parts, which thereby are more sliding and following; as in gold. Bacon.

2. Mildness; kindness.

A wise man, when there is a necessity of expressing any evil actions, should do it by a word that has a secondary idea of kindness or softness; or a word that carries in it rebuke and severity. Watts.

3. Civility; gentleness.

They turn the softness of the tongue into the hardness of the teeth. Holyday.

Improve these virtues, with a softness of manners, and a sweetness of conversation. Dryden.

4. Effeminacy; vitious delicacy.

So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, softness, and effeminacy, are prevented; and there is but little room for temptation. Taylor.

He was not delighted with the softnesses of the court. Clarendon.

5. Timorousness; pusillanimity.

This virtue could not proceed but of fear or softness; for he was valiant and active. Bacon.

Saving a man's self, or suffering, if with reason, is virtue: if without it, is softness or obsequy. Grew.

6. Quality contrary to harshness.

Softness of sounds is distinct from the exility of sounds. Bacon.

7. Facility; gentleness; candour; easiness to be affected.

Such was the ancient simplicity and softness of spirit which sometimes prevailed in the world, that they, whose words were even as oracles amongst men, seemed evermore loth to give sentence against any thing publickly received in the church of God. Hooker.

8. Contrariety to energetick vehemence.

Who but thyself the mind and ear can please
With strength and softness, energy and ease? Harte.

9. Mildness; meekness.

For contemplation he and valour form'd,
For softness she and sweet attractive grace. Milton.
Her stubborn look

This softness from thy finger took. Waller.

SOHO. interj. A form of calling from a distant place.

TO SOIL. v. a. [Italian, Saxon; soelen, old German; soiller, French.]

1. To foul; to dirt; to pollute; to stain; to sully.

A silly man in simple weeds forlorn,
And soil'd with dust of the long dried way. Fairy Queen.

Although some hereticks have abused this text, yet the sun is not soiled in passage. Bacon.
If I soil

Myself with sin, I then but vainly toil. Sandys.

I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds

With the rank vapours of this sin-worn mould. Milton.

Bad fruit of knowledge, if this be to know,

Which leaves us naked thus, of honour void,

Of innocence, of faith, of purity,

Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd. Milton.

One, who cou'd n't for a taste o' th' flesh come in,

Licks the soil'd earth,

While reeking with a mangled Ombit's blood. Tate.

If the eye-glass be tinted faintly with the smoke of a lamp or torch, to obscure the light of the star, the fainter light in the circumference of the star ceases to be visible, and the star, if the glass be sufficiently soiled with smoke, appears something more like a mathematical point. Newton.

An absent hero's bed they fought to soil,
An absent hero's wealth they made their spoil. Pope.

2. To dung; to manure.

Men now present, just as they soil their ground, not that they love the dirt, but that they expect a crop. South.

3. To soil a horse; to purge him by giving him grafs in the spring. It is in Shakspeare to glut. [saouller, French.]

The soiled horse. Shakspeare.

SOIL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Dirt; spot; pollution; foulness.

By indirect ways

I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublesome it sat upon my head:
To thee it shall descend with better quiet;
For all the soil of the achievement goes
With me into the earth. Shakspeare.

That would be a great soil in the new glofs of your marriage. Shakspeare.

Vexed I am with passions,
Which give some soil perhaps to my behaviour. Shakspeare.

A lady's honour must be touch'd,
Which, nice as ermines, will not bear a soil. Dryd.

2. [sol, French; solum, Latin.] Ground; earth, considered with relation to its vegetative qualities.

Judgment may be made of waters by the soil whereupon they run. Bacon.

Her spots thou see'st

As clouds, and clouds may rain, and rain produce Fruits in her soften'd soil. Milton.

The first cause of a kingdom's thriving is the fruitfulness of the soil, to produce the necessities and conveniences of life; not only for the inhabitants, but for exportation. Swift.

3. Land; country.

Dorset, that with fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance shall call home
To high promotions. Shakspeare.

O unexpected stroke, worse than of death!
Must I thus leave thee, Paradise! thus leave Thee, native soil! these happy walks and shades, Fit haunts of gods. Milton.

4. Dung; compost.

The haven has been stopped up by the great heaps of dirt that the sea has thrown into it; for all the soil on that side of Ravenna has been left there intently by the sea. Addison.

Improve land by dung, and other sort of soils. Mortimer.

SOI'LINESS. n. f. [from soil.] Stain; foulness.

Make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin, whether it yield no soiliness more than silver. Bacon.

SOI'LURE. n. f. [from soil.] Stain; pollution.

He merits well to have her,
Not making any scruple of her soilure. Shakspeare.

TO SO'JOURN. v. n. [sejourner, French; segiornare, Italian.] To dwell any where for a time; to live as not at home; to inhabit as not in a settled habitation. Almost out of use.

If, till the expiration of your month,
You will return, and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me. Shakspeare.

Th' advantage of his absence took the king,
And in the mean time sojourn'd at my father's. Shakspeare.

How comes it he is to sojourn with you? how creeps acquaintance? Shakspeare.

Here dwells he; though he sojourn every where
In progress, yet his standing house is here. Donne.

The *sojourn*ing of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years. Exodus.

The soldiers first assembled at Newcastle, and there sojourned three days. Hayward.

To sojourn in that land

He comes invited. Milton.

He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees abroad to the state of things at home. Atterbury.

SO'JOURN. n. f. [sejour, French; from the verb.] A temporary residence; a casual and no settled habitation. This word was anciently accented on the last syllable: Milton accents it indifferently.

The princes, France and Burgundy,
Long in our court have made their am'rous sojourn. Shakspeare.

Thou I revisit now,
Escap'd the Stygian pool, though long detain'd
In that obscure sojourn. Milton.

Scarce view'd the Galilean towns,
And once a-year Jerusalem, few days
Short sojourn. Milton.

SO'JOURNER. n. f. [from sojourn.] A temporary dweller.

We are strangers and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on earth are as a shadow. 1 Chronicles.

Waves o'erthrew
Busiris, and his Memphian chivalry,
While with perfidious hatred they pursued
The sojourners of Goshen. Milton.

Not for a night, or quick revolving year;
Welcome an owner, not a sojourner. Dryden.

TO SO'PLACE. v. a. [solacier, old French; solazzare, Italian; solatium, Latin.] To comfort; to cheer; to amuse.

We will with some strange pastime solace them. Shakspeare.

The birds with song
Solac'd the woods. Milton.

TO SO'PLACE. v. n. To take comfort; to be recreated. Obsolete.

One poor and loving child,
But one thing to rejoice and solace in,
And cruel death hath catch'd it from my sight. Shakspeare.

Were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,
This sickly land might solace as before. Shakspeare.

SO'PLACE. n. f. [solatium, Latin.] Comfort; pleasure; alleviation; that which gives comfort or pleasure; recreation; amusement.

Therein sat a lady fresh and fair,
Making sweet solace to herself alone;
Sometimes the sung as loud as lark in air, Sometimes she laugh'd, that nigh her breath was gone. Spenser.

If we have that which is meet and right, although they be glad, we are not to envy them this their solace; we do not think it a duty of ours to be in every such thing their tormentors. Hooker.

Give me leave to go;
Sorrow would solace, and my age would ease. Shakspeare.

Great joy he promis'd to his thoughts, and new Solace in her return. Milton.

If I would delight my private hours
With music or with poem, where so soon
As in our native language can I find That solace? Milton.

Though fight be lost,
Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd
Where other senses want not their delights,
At home in leisure and domestick ease, Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eye-sight exposes daily men abroad. Milton.

SOLA'NDER. n. f. [soulandres, French.] A disease in horses. Diæ.

SO'LAR. } adj. [solaire, French; solaris,
SO'LARY. } Latin.]

1. Being of the sun.

The corpuscles that make up the beams of light be solar effluvia, or minute particles of some ethereal substance, thrusting on one another from the lucid body. Boyle.

Instead of golden fruits,
By genial show'rs and solar heat supplied,
Unlufferable winter had defac'd
Earth's blooming charms, and made a barren waste. Blackmore.

2. Belonging to the sun.

They denominate some herbs solar, and some lunar. Bacon.

Scripture hath been punctual in other records, concerning solar miracles. Brown.

3. Born under or in the predominant influence of the sun.

The cock was pleas'd to hear him speak so fair,
And proud beside, as solar people are. Dryden.

4. Measured by the sun.

The rule to find the moon's age, on any day of any solar month, cannot shew precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and moon, and the number of days of the solar months. Holder.

SOLD. The pret. and part. pass. of sell.

SOLD. n. f. [souldée, old Fr. Trevoux.] Military pay; warlike entertainment.

But were your will her sold to entertain,
And number'd be 'mongst knights of maidenhead,
Great guerdon, well I wot, should you remain,
And in her favour high be reckoned. Fairy Queen.

SO'LDAN. n. f. [for sultan.] The emperor of the Turks.

They at the soldan's chair defied the best. Milt.

SO'LDANEL. n. f. [soldanella, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

TO SO'LDER. v. a. [soudre, Fr. soldare, Italian; solidare, Latin.] See SODER.

1. To unite or fasten with any kind of metallick cement.

A concave sphere of gold, filled with water, and soldered up, has, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold. Newton.

2. To mend; to unite any thing broken.

It booteth them not thus to solder up a broken cause, whereof their first and last discourses will fall asunder. Hooker.

Wars 'twixt you twain would be
As if the world should cleave, and that slain men Should solder up the rift. Shakspeare.

Thou visible god,
That sold'rest close impossibilities,
And mak'st them kifs! Shakspeare.

Learn'd he was in med'c'nal lore;
For by his side a pouch he wore Replete with strange hermetick powder,
That wounds nine miles point-blank would solder. Hudibras.

The naked cynick's jar ne'er flames; if broken,
'Tis quickly solder'd, or a new bespoken. Dryden.

At the restoration the presbyterians, and other sects, did all unite and solder up their several schemes, to join against the church. Swift.

SO'LDER. n. f. [from the verb.] Metallick cement. A metallick body that will melt with less heat than the body to be soldered.

Goldsmiths say the coarsest stuff
Will serve for solder well enough. Swift.

SO'LDERER. n. f. [from solder.] One that solders or mends.

SO'LDIER. n. f. [soldat, Fr. from solidarius, low Lat. of solidus, a piece of money, the pay of a soldier; souldée, French.]

1. A fighting man; a warrior. Originally one who served for pay.

Your sister is the better soldier. Shakspeare.

Good Siward,
An older and a better soldier none. Shakspeare.

A soldier
Full of strange oaths and bearded like a pard,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Ev'n in the cannon's mouth. Shakspeare.

A hateful service, that dissolv'd the knees
Of many a soldier. Chapman.

I have not yet forgot I am a king:
If I have wrong'd thee, charge me face to face;
I have not yet forgot I am a soldier. Dryden.

2. It is generally used of the common men, as distinct from the commanders.

It were meet that any one, before he came to be a captain, should have been a soldier. Spenser.

SO'LDIERLIKE. } adj. [soldier and like.] SO'LDIERLY. } Martial; military; becoming a soldier.

Although at the first they had fought with beastly fury rather than any soldierly discipline, practice had now made them comparable to the best. Sidney.

I will maintain the word with my sword to be a soldierlike word, and a word of good command. Shakspeare.

They, according to a soldierly custom, in cases of extremity, by interchange of a kiss by every of them upon the swords of others, sealed a resolution to maintain the place. Hayward.

Enemies as well as friends confessed, that it was as soldierly an action as had been performed on either side. Clarendon.

SO'LDIERSHIP. n. s. [from soldier.] Military character; martial qualities; behaviour becoming a soldier; martial skill.

Thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiership: he did look far Into the service of the time, and was Disciple of the bravest. Shakspeare.

By sea you throw away
The absolute soldiership you have by land, Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark'd footmen. Shakspeare.

SO'LDIERY. n. s. [from soldier.]

1. Body of military men; soldiers collectively.

The Memphian soldiery,
That swell'd the Erythrean wave, when wall'd,
The unfroze waters marvellously stood. Philips.

I charge not the soldiery with ignorance and contempt of learning, without allowing exceptions. Swift.

2. Soldiership; military service.

Offering him, if he would exercise his courage in soldiery, he would commit some charge unto him under his lieutenant Philanax. Sidney.

SOLE. n. s. [solum, Latin.]

1. The bottom of the foot.

I will only be bold with Benedict for his company;
for from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot
he is all mirth. Shakspeare.

Tickling is most in the soles of the feet: the cause is, the rareness of being touched there. Bacon.

The soles of the feet have great affinity with the head and the mouth of the stomach; as going wet-shod, to those that use it not, affecteth both. Bacon.

Such resting found the sole of unblest feet. Milt.

In the make of the camel's foot, the sole is flat and broad, being very fleshy, and covered only with a thick, soft, and somewhat callous skin, fit to travel fandy places. Ray.

2. The foot.

To redeem thy woful parent's head
From tyrant's rage and ever-dying dread,
Halt wander'd through the world now long a day,
Yet cease not thy weary soles to lead. F. Queen.

3. [solea, Lat.] The bottom of the shoe.

Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.
—Not I, believe me: you have dancing shoes,
With nimble soles. Shakspeare.

On fortune's cap we are not the very button.—
Nor the soles of her shoes. Shakspeare.

The caliga was a military shoe, with a very thick sole, tied above the instep with leather thongs. Arbuthnot.

4. The part of any thing that touches the ground.

The strike-block is a plane shorter than the jointer, having its sole made exactly flat and straight, and is used for the shooting of a short join. Moxon.

Elm is proper for mills, soles of wheels, and pipes. Mortimer.

5. A kind of sea fish.

Of flat fish, rays, thornbacks, soles, and flouks. Carew.

To SOLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with soles: as, to sole a pair of shoes.

His feet were soled with a treble tuft of a close short tawney down. Grew.

SOLE. adj. [sol, old Fr. solus, Lat.]

1. Single; only.

Take not upon thee to be judge alone: there is no sole judge but one: say not to others, Receive my sentence, when their authority is above thine. Hook.

Orpheus every where expressed the infinite and sole power of one God, though he used the name of Jupiter. Raleigh.

To me shall be the glory sole among
Th' infernal pow'rs. Milton.

A rattling tempest through the branches went,
That stripp'd them bare, and one sole way they rent. Dryden.

He, sole in power, at the beginning said,
Let sea, and air, and earth, and heav'n be made;
And it was so: and, when he shall ordain
In other sort, has but to speak again,
And they shall be no more. Prior.

2. [In law.] Not married.

Some others are such as a man cannot make his wife, though he himself be sole and unmarried. Ayliffe.

SO'LECIISM. n. s. [σολοικισμός.] Unfitness of one word to another; impropriety in language. A barbarism may be in one word, a solecism must be of more.

There is scarce a solecism in writing which the best author is not guilty of, if we be at liberty to read him in the words of some manuscript. Addison.

SO'LELY. adv. [from sole.] Singly; only.

You knew my father well, and in him me,
Left solely heir to all his lands. Shakspeare.

This night's great business Shall to all our nights and days to come Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom. Shakspeare.

That the intemperate heat of the clime solely occasions this complexion, experience admits not. Brown.

This truth is pointed chiefly, if not solely, upon sinners of the first rate, who have cast off all regard for piety. Atterbury.

They all chose rather to rest the cause solely on logical disputation, than upon the testimonies of the ancients. Waterland.

SO'LEMN. adj. [solemnel, French; solem-nis, Latin.]

1. Anniversary; observed once a year with religious ceremonies.

The worship of this image was advanced, and a solemn supplication observed every year. Stillingfl.

2. Religiously grave; awful.

His holy rites and solemn feasts profan'd. Milt.

3. Formal; ritual; religiously regular.

The necessary business of a man's calling, with some, will not afford much time for set and solemn prayer. Duty of Man.

4. Striking with seriousness; sober; serious.

Then 'gan he loudly through the house to call,
But no one care to answer to his cry;
There reign'd a solemn silence over all. F. Queen.

To swage with solemn touches troubled thoughts.
Milton.

Nor then the solemn nightingale ceas'd warbling. Milton.

5. Grave; affectedly serious.

When Steel reflects upon the many solemn strong barriers to our succession, of laws and oaths, he thinks all fear vanisheth: so do I, provided the epithet solemn goes for nothing; because, though I have heard of a solemn day, and a solemn coxcomb, yet I can conceive no idea of a solemn barrier. Swift.

SO'LEMNESS. } n. s. [solemnité, Fr. from SOLE'MNITY. } solemn.]

1. Ceremony or rite annually performed.

Were these annual solemnities only practised in the church? Nelson.

Though the days of solemnity, which are but few, must quickly finish that outward exercise of devotion which appertains to such times; yet they increase men's inward dispositions to virtue for the present, and, by their frequent returns, bring the same at length to perfection. Nelson.

Great was the cause; our old solemnities
From no blind zeal or fond tradition rise;
But, sav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
These grateful honours to the god of day. Pope.

2. Religious ceremony.

3. Awful ceremony or procession.

The lady Constance,
Some speedy messenger bid repair
To our solemnity. Shakspeare.

The moon, like to a silver bow
New bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities. Shakspeare.

There may be greater danger in using such compositions in churches, at a arraignment, plays, and solemnities. Bacon.

What fun'ral pomp shall floating Tiber see,
When rising from his bed he views the sad solemnity! Dryden.

Though the forms and solemnities of the last judgment may bear some resemblance to those we are acquainted with here, yet the rule of proceeding shall be very different. Atterbury.

4. Manner of acting awfully serious.

With much more skilful cruelty, and horrible solemnity, he caused each thing to be prepared for his triumph of tyranny. Sidney.

5. Gravity; steady seriousness.

The stateliness and gravity of the Spaniards shews itself in the solemnity of their language. Spectator.

6. Awful grandeur; grave stateliness; sober dignity.

A diligent decency was in Polycletus, above others; to whom though the highest praise be attributed by the most, yet some think he wanted solemnity. Wotton.

7. Affected gravity.

Pr'ythee, Virgilia, turn thy solemnity out o' door,
And go along with us. Shakspeare.

Be this truth eternal ne'er forgot,
Solemnity's a cover for a sot. Young.

This speech ended with a solemnity of accent. Female Quixote.

SOLEMNIZATION. n. s. [from solemnize.]

The act of solemnizing; celebration.

Soon followed the solemnization of the marriage between Charles and Anne dutchess of Bretagne, with whom he received the dutchy of Bretagne. Bacon.

To SO'LEMNIZE. v. a. [solemniser, French;
from solemn.]

1. To dignify by particular formalities; to celebrate.

Dorilaus in a great battle was deprived of life; his obsequies being no more solemnized by the tears of his partakers than the blood of his enemies. Sidney.

Baptism to be administered in one place, and marriage solemnized in another. Hooker.

Then 'gan they sprinkle all the parts with wine,
And made great feast to solemnize that day. F. Qu.

The multitude of the celestial host were heard to solemnize his miraculous birth. Boyle.

Their choice nobility and flower Met from all parts to solemnize this feast. Milton.

2. To perform religiously once a year.

What commandment the Jews had to celebrate their feast of dedication, is never spoken of in the law, yet solemnized even by our Saviour himself. Hooker.

SO'LEMNLY. adv. [from solemn.]

1. With annual religious ceremonies.

2. With formal gravity and stateliness;
with affected gravity.

There are, in points of wisdom and sufficiency, that do nothing or little very solemnly. Bacon.

The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners, with selected friends, withdraw;
There in deaf murmurs solemnly are wise,
Whispering like winds ere hurricanes arise. Dryden.

3. With formal state.

Let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London. Shakspeare.

4. With religious seriousness.

To demonstrate how much men are blinded by their own partiality, I do solemnly assure the reader, that he is the only person from whom I ever heard that objection. Swift.

To SOLICIT. v. a. [solicito, Latin.]

1. To importune; to entreat.

If you bethink yourself of any crime,
Unreconcil'd as yet to heav'n and grace,
Solicit for it straight. Shakspeare.

We heartily solicit

Your gracious self to take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land. Shakspeare.

How he solicits heav'n

Himself best knows; but strangely visited people,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures. Shakspeare.

Did I request thee, Maker! from my clay
To mold me man? Did I solicit thee
From darkness to promote me? Milton.

The guardian of my faith so false did prove,
As to solicit me with lawless love. Dryden.

2. To call to action; to summon; to awake;
to excite.

This supernatural soliciting
Cannot be ill, cannot be good. Shakspeare.

Solicit Henry with her wond'rous praise;
Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount

Her nat'ral graces, that extinguish art. Shakspeare.

That fruit solicited her longing eye. Milton.

Sounds and some tangible qualities solicit their proper senses, and force an entrance to the mind. Locke.

He is solicited by popular custom to indulge himself in forbidden liberties. Rogers.

3. To implore; to ask.

With that she wept again; till he again soliciting
the conclusion of her story, Then must you, said she, know the story of Amphialus? Sidney.

4. To attempt; to try to obtain.

I view my crime, but kindle at the view;
Repent old pleasures, and solicit new. Pope.

5. To disturb; to disquiet. A latinism.

Solicit not thy thoughts with matters hid. Milt.

I find your love, and would reward it too;
But anxious fears solicit my weak breast. Dryden.

SOLICITATION. n. f. [from solicit.]

1. Importunity; act of importuning.

I can produce a man
Of female seed, far abler to resist
All his solicitations, and at length
All his vast force, and drive me back to hell. Milton.

2. Invitation; excitement.

Children are surrounded with new things, which,
by a constant solicitation of their senses, draw the mind constantly to them. Locke.

SOLICITOR. n. f. [from solicit.]

1. One who petitions for another.

Be merry, Cassio;
For thy solicitor shall rather die
Than give thy cause away. Shakspeare.

Honest minds will consider poverty as a recommendation in the person who applies himself to them, and make the justice of his cause the most powerful solicitor in his behalf. Addison.

2. One who does in Chancery the business which is done by attorneys in other courts.

For the king's attorney and solicitor general, their continual use for the king's service requires men every way fit. Bacon.

SOLICITOUS. adj. [solicitus, Latin.]

Anxious; careful; concerned. It has commonly about before that which causes anxiety; sometimes for or of. For is proper before something to be obtained.

Our hearts are pure, when we are not solicitous of the opinion and censures of men, but only that we do our duty. Taylor.

Enjoy the present, whatsoever it be, and be not solicitous for the future. Taylor.

The colonel had been intent upon other things,
and not enough solicitous to finish the fortifications.
Clarendon.

In providing money for disbanding the armies, upon which they were marvellously solicitous, there arose a question. Clarendon.

They who were in truth zealous for the preservation of the laws, were solicitous to preserve the king's honour from any indignity, and his regal power from violation. Clarendon.

Laud attended on his majesty, which he would have been excused from, if that design had not been in view, to accomplish which he was solicitous for his advice. Clarendon.

There kept their watch the legions, while the grand

In council sat, solicitous what chance Might intercept their emperor sent. Milton.

Without sign of boast, or sign of joy,
Solicitous and blank, he thus began. Milton.

No man is solicitous about the event of that which he has in his power to dispose of. South.

You have not only been careful of my fortune, the effect of your nobleness; but you have been solicitous of my reputation, which is that of your kindness. Dryden.

The tender dame, solicitous to know Whether her child should reach old age or no, Consults the sage Tiresias. Addison.

How lawful and praiseworthy is the care of a family! And yet how certainly are many people rendered incapable of all virtue, by a worldly soli- citous temper! Law.

SOLICITOUSLY. adv. [from solicitous.]

Anxiously; carefully.

The medical art being conversant about the health and life of man, doctrinal errors in it are to be solicitously avoided. Boyle.

He would surely have as solicitously promoted their learning, as ever he obstructed it. Decay of Piety.

SOLICITUDE. n. f. [solicitud, Latin.]

Anxiety; carefulness.

In this, by comparison, we behold the many cares and great labours of worldly men, their solicitude and outward shews, and publick ostentation, their pride, and vanities. Raleigh.

If they would but provide for eternity with the same solicitude, and real care, as they do for this life, they could not fail of heaven. Tillotson.

They are to be known by a wonderful solicitude
for the reputation of their friends. Tatler.

SOLICITRESS. n. f. [feminine of solicitor.]

A woman who petitions for another.

I had the most earnest solicitress, as well as the fairest; and nothing could be refused to my lady Hyde. Dryden.

SO'LID. adj. [solidus, Lat. solide, Fr.]

1. Not liquid; not fluid.

Land that ever burn'd
With solid, as the lake with liquid fire. Milton.

2. Not hollow; full of matter; compact;
dense.

Thin airy things extend themselves in place,
Things solid take up little space. Cowley.

I hear his thund'ring voice resound,
And trampling feet that shake the solid ground. Dryden.

3. Having all the geometrical dimensions.

In a solid foot are 1728 solid inches, weighing 76 pound of rain water. Arbutnot.

4. Strong; firm.

The duke's new palace is a noble pile, built after this manner, which makes it look very solid and majestick. Addison.

5. Sound; not weakly.

If persons devote themselves to science, they should be well assured of a solid and strong constitution of body, to bear the fatigue. Watts.

6. Real; not empty; true; not fallacious.

This might satisfy sober and wise men, not with soft and specious words, but with pregnant and solid reasons. King Charles.

Either not define at all, or seek out other solid methods, and more catholick grounds of defining.
Hammond.

The earth may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun. Milton.

7. Not light; not superficial; grave; profound.

These, wanting wit, affect gravity, and go by the name of solid men; and a solid man is, in plain English, a solid solemn fool. Dryden.

SO'LID. n. f. [In physick.] The part containing the fluids.

The first and most simple solids of our body are perhaps merely terrestrial, and incapable of any change or disease. Arbutnot.

Lat. from solid.]

1. Fulness of matter; not hollowness.

2. Firmness; hardness; compactness; density; not fluidity.

That which hinders the approach of two bodies, when they are moving one towards another, I call solidity. Locke.

The stone itself, whether naked or invested with earth, is not by its solidity secured, but washed down. Woodward.

3. Truth; not fallaciousness; intellectual strength; certainty.

The most known rules are placed in so beautiful a light, that they have all the graces of novelty; and make the reader, who was before acquainted with them, still more convinced of their truth and solidity. Addison.

His fellow-peers have attended to his eloquence, and have been convinced by the solidity of his reasoning. Prior.

This pretence has a great deal more of art than of solidity in it. Waterland.

SO'LIDLY. adv. [from solid.]

1. Firmly; densely; compactly.

2. Truly; on good grounds.

A complete brave man ought to know solidly the main end he is in the world for. Digby.

I look upon this as a sufficient ground for any rational man to take up his religion upon, and which I defy the subtlest atheist in the world solidly to answer; namely, that it is good to be sure. South.

SO'LIDNESS. n. f. [from solid.] Solidity;
firmness; density.

It beareth missestoe: the cause may be the closeness and solidness of the wood and pith of the oak.
Bacon.

It is built with that unusual solidness, that it seems he intended to make a sacrifice to perpetuity, and to contest with the iron teeth of time. Howel.

SOLIDUNGULOUS. adj. [solidus and un- gula, Lat.] Whole-hoofed.

It is set down by Aristotle and Pliny, that an horse, and all solidungulous or whole-hoofed animals, have no gall; which we find repugnant unto reason. Brown.

SOLIFIDIAN. n. f. [solus and fides, Lat.]

One who supposes only faith, not works, necessary to justification.

It may be justly feared, that the title of funda-mentals, being ordinarily confined to the doctrines of faith, hath occasioned that great scandal in the church of God, at which so many myriads of solifi- dians have stumbled, and fallen irreversibly, by conceiving heaven a reward of true opinions. Hammond.

SOLILOQUY. n. f. [soliloque, Fr. solus and loquor, Lat.] A discourse made by one in solitude to himself.

The whole poem is a soliloquy: Solomon is the person that speaks: he is at once the hero and the author; but he tells us very often what others say to him. Prior.

He finds no respite from his anxious grief,
Then seeks from his soliloquy relief. Garth.

If I should own myself in love, you know lovers are always allowed the comfort of soliloquy. Spektator.

Feed thy people with thy rod, the flock of thine heritage which dwell solitarily in the wood. Micab.

SO'LITARINESS. n. f. [from solitary.] Solitude; forbearance of company; habitual retirement.

There is no cause to blame the prince for sometimes hearing them: the blame-worthiness is, that to hear them he rather goes to solitariness, than makes them come to company. Sidney.

You subject yourself to solitariness, the fly enemy that doth most separate a man from well-doing. Sidney.

At home, in wholesome solitariness, My piteous soul began the wretchedness Of suitors at the court to mourn. Donne.

SO'LITARY. adj. [solitaire, Fr. solitarius, Latin.]

1. Living alone; not having company. Those rare and solitary, these in flocks. Milton.

2. Retired; remote from company; done or passed without company. In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well; but in respect that it is private, it is a very vile life. Shakespeare.

Satan explores his solitary flight. Him fair Lavinia Shall breed in groves to lead a solitary life. Dryden.

3. Gloomy; dismal. Let that night be solitary, let no joyful voice come therein. Job.

4. Single. Nor did a solitary vengeance serve: the cutting off one head is not enough; the eldest son must be involved. King Charles.

Relations alternately relieve each other, their mutual concurrences supporting their solitary instabilities. Brown.

SO'LITARY. n. f. [from the adjective.] One that lives alone; a hermit.

You describe so well your hermitical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave with a spring, or any of the accommodations that befit a solitary. Pope.

SO'LITUDE. n. f. [solitude, Fr. solitudo, Latin.]

1. Lonely life; state of being alone. It had been hard to have put more truth and untruth together, in few words, than in that speech, Whosoever is delighted with solitude, is either a wild beast or a god. Bacon.

What call'st thou solitude? Is not the earth With various living creatures, and the air, Replenish'd, and all these at thy command, To come and play before thee? Milton.

Such only can enjoy the country, who are capable of thinking when they are there: then they are prepared for solitude, and in that solitude is prepared for them. Dryden.

2. Loneliness; remoteness from company. The solitude of his little parish is become matter of great comfort to him, because he hopes that God has placed him and his flock there, to make it their way to heaven. Law.

Addison.

So'NGISH. adj. [from song.] Containing songs; consisting of songs. A low word.
The songish part must abound in the softness and variety of numbers, its intention being to please the hearing. Dryden.

So'NGSTER. n. s. [from song.] A finger.
Used of human fingers, it is a word of slight contempt.

The pretty songsters of the spring, with their various notes, did seem to welcome him as he passed.
Howel.

Some songsters can no more sing in any chamber but their own, than some clerks read in any book but their own. L'Estrange.

Either songster holding out their throats,
And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes.
Dryden.

So'NGSTRESS. n. s. [from song.] A female finger.

Through the soft silence of the listening night
The sober-suited songstress trills her lay. Thomson.

So'NNET. n. s. [sonnet, French; sonnetto,
Italian.]

1. A short poem consisting of fourteen lines, of which the rhymes are adjusted by a particular rule. It is not very suitable to the English language; and has not been used by any man of eminence since Milton, of whose sonnets this is a specimen.

A book was writ of late call'd Tetrachordon,
And woven close, both matter, form, and stile;
The subject new; it walk'd the town a-while,
Numb'ring good intellects, now seldom por'd on;
Cries the stall-reader, Bless us, what a word on A title-page is this! and some in file
Stand spelling false, while one might walk to Mile-End-green. Why is it harder, sirs, than Gordon, Colkitto, or Macdonnel, or Galasp?
Those rugged names to our like mouths grow
fleck,

That would have made Quintillian stare and gasp:
Thy age, like ours, soul of sir John Cheek,
Hated not learning worse than toad or asp,
When thou taught'st Cambridge and king Edward Greek. Milton.

2. A small poem.
Let us into the city presently,
To sort some gentlemen well skill'd in musick;
I have a sonnet that will serve the turn. Shakspeare.

SONNETTE'ER. n. s. [sonnetier, Fr. from sonnet.] A small poet, in contempt.
Assist me, some extemporal god of rhyme; for I am sure I shall turn sonnetteer. Shakspeare.

There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry; your makers of parterres and flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonnetteers in this art.
Spectator.

What woful stuff this madrigal would be,
In some starv'd hackney sonnetteer or me!
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens! how the style refines! Pope.

SONI'FEROUS. adj. [sonus and fero, Lat.]
Giving or bringing sound.

SOO

This will appear, let the subject matter of sounds be what it will; either the atmosphere, or the etherial part thereof, or soniferous particles of bodies.
Derbam.

SONORI'FICK. adj. [sonorus and facio, Lat.]
Producing sound.

If he should ask me why a clock strikes, and points to the hour; and I should say, it is by an indicating form and sonorifick quality, this would be unsatisfactory. Watts.

SONO'ROUS. adj. [sonore, Fr. sonorus,
Latin.]

1. Loud sounding; giving loud or shrill sound. Bodies are distinguished as sonorous or unsonorous.

All the while
Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds;
At which the universal host up sent
A shout that tore hell's concave. Milton.

2. High sounding; magnificent of sound.
The Italian opera, amidst all the meanness and familiarity of the thoughts, has something beautiful and sonorous in the expression. Addison.

The vowels are sonorous. Dryden.
SONO'ROUSLY. adv. [from sonorous.]
With high sound; with magnificence of sound.

SONO'ROUSNESS. n. s. [from sonorous.]
1. The quality of giving sound.

Enquiring of a maker of viols and lutes of what age he thought lutes ought to be, to attain their full and best seasoning for sonorousness, he replied, That in some twenty years would be requisite, and in others forty. Boyle.

2. Magnificence of sound.
SOON. adv. [sun, Gothick; rona, Sax.
saen, Dutch.]

1. Before long time be past; shortly after any time assigned or supposed.

Nor did they not perceive their evil plight,
Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd. Milt.
You must obey me, soon or late;
Why should you vainly struggle with your fate?
Dryden.

2. Early; before any time supposed: opposed to late.

O boy! thy father gave thee life too soon,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late. Shaksp.
Do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner.
Hebrews.

How is it that you are come so soon to-day?
Exodus.

The earlier stayeth for the later, and not the later cometh sooner. Bacon.

3. Readily; willingly.
I would as soon see a river winding through woods and meadows, as when it is tossed up in so many whimsical figures at Versailles. Addison.

4. It has in Sidney the signification of an adjective, whether licentious or according to the custom of his time.

He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue.
Sidney.

5. SOON as. Immediately; at the very time.

As soon as he came nigh unto the camp, he saw the calf and the dance. Exodus.

Nor was his virtue poison'd, soon as born,
With the too early thoughts of being king. Dryden.

Feasts, and business, and pleasures, and enjoyments, seem great things to us, whilst we think of nothing else; but as soon as we add death to them, they all sink into an equal littleness. Law.

SO'ONLY. adv. [from soon.] Quickly; speedily. This word I remember in no other place; but if soon be, as it seems once to have been, an adjective, soonly is proper.

A mason meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and, soonly approving of it, places it in his work. More.

SOO

So'OPBERRY. n. s. [sapindus, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

SOOT. n. s. [rot, Saxon; soot, Islandick; soet, Dutch.] Condensed or embodied smoke.

Soot, though thin spread in a field, is a very good compost. Bacon.

If the fire be not kept within the tunnel of the chimney, and some appointed to sweep down the soot, the house will be in danger of burning. Howel.

Often they assay'd,
Hunger and thirst constraining; drugg'd as oft
With hatefullest disrelish, with'd their jaws,
With soot and cinders fill'd. Milton.

Our household gods, that droop upon our hearths,
Each from his venerable face shall brush
The Macedonian soot, and shine again. Dryden.

So'OTED. adj. [from soot.] Smeared, manured, or covered with soot.

The land was sooted before. Mortimer.

So'OTERKIN. n. s. A kind of false birth fabled to be produced by the Dutch women from sitting over their stoves.

When Jove was, from his teeming head,
Of wit's fair goddess brought to bed,
There follow'd at his lying-in,
For after-birth, a sooterkin. Swift.

SOOTH. n. s. [roð, Sax.] Truth; reality.
Obsolete.

Sir, understand you this of me in sooth,
The youngest daughter, whom you hearken for,
Her father keeps from all access of suitors,
Until the elder sister first be wed. Shakspeare.

He looks like sooth: he says he loves my daughter;
I think so too; for never gaz'd the moon
Upon the water, as he'll stand and read
My daughter's eyes. Shakspeare.

If I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change caps. Camden.

The very sooth of it is, that an ill-habit has the force of an ill fate. L'Estrange.

I did not mean to chide you;
For, sooth to say, I hold it noble in you
To cherish the distress'd. Rowe.

SOOTH. adj. [roð, Sax.] Pleasing; delightful.

Some other means I have,
Which once of Melibæus old I learn'd,
The soothest shepherd that e'er pip'd on plains.
Milton.

SOOTH. n. s. Sweetness; kindness. This seems to be the meaning here.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! Shakspeare.

To SOOTH. v. a. [geroðian, Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to please with blandishments.

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shaksp.

Can I sooth tyranny?
Seem pleas'd to see my royal master murder'd,
His crown usurp'd, a distaff in the throne? Dryden.

By his fair-daughter is the chief confin'd,
Who sooths to dear delight his anxious mind;
Successful all her soft caresses prove,
To banish from his breast his country's love. Pope.

Thinks he that Memnon, soldier as he is,
Thoughtless and dull, will listen to his soothing?
Rowe.

I've tried the force of every reason on him,
Sooth'd and caress'd, been angry, sooth'd again;
Laid safety, life, and interest in his fight;
But all are vain, he scorns them all for Cato. Addison.

2. To calm; to soften; to mollify.

The beldame Sooths her with blandishments, and frights with threats. Dryden.

3. To gratify; to please.

This calm'd his cares; sooth'd with his future fame,
And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden.

So'OTHER. n. s. [from sooth.] A flatterer;
one who gains by blandishments.

S O P

S O P

S O R

I cannot flatter: I defy
The tongues of soothsayers. Shakspeare.
TO SOO'THSAY. v. n. [sooth and say.] To predict; to foretell.
A damsel, possessed with a spirit of divination, met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying. Æt.
SOO'THSAYER. n. f. [from soothsay.] A foreteller; a predictor; a prognosticator.
Scarce was Musidorus made partaker of this oft blinding light, when there were found numbers of soothsayers, who affirmed strange and incredible things should be performed by that child. Sidney.
A soothsayer bids you beware the ideo of March. Shakspeare.
He was animated to expect the papacy by the prediction of a soothsayer, that one should succeed Pope Leo, whose name should be Adrian, an aged man of mean birth, and of great learning and wisdom. Bacon.
SOO'TINESS. n. f. [from sooty.] The quality of being sooty; fuliginousness.
SOO'TY. adj. [from soot.]
1. Breeding soot.
By fire of sooty coal th' alchymist turns Metals to gold. Milton.
2. Consisting of soot; fuliginous.
There may be some chymical way so to defecate this oil, that it shall not spend into a sooty matter. Wilkins.
3. Black; dark; dusky.
All the grisly legions that troop Under the sooty flag of Acheron; Harpies and hydras, and all monstrous forms. Milton.
Swift on his sooty pinions flits the gnome, And in a vapour reach'd the gloomy dome. Pope.
TO SOOTY. v. n. [from soot.] To make black with soot.
Then (for his own weeds) shirt and coat all rent, Tann'd and all sootied with noisome smoke She put him on; and over all a cloke. Chapman.
SOP. n. f. [sop, Saxon; sopa, Spanish; soppe, Dutch.]
1. Any thing steeped in liquor, commonly to be eaten.
The bounded waters Would lift their bosoms higher than the shores, And make a sop of all this solid globe. Shakspeare.
Draw, you rogue! for though it be night, yet the moon shines: I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you. Shakspeare.
Sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itself. Bacon.
2. Any thing given to pacify, from the sop given to Cerberus.
The prudent Sibyl had before prepar'd A sop, in honey steep'd, to charm the guard; Which, mix'd with powerful drugs, she cast before His greedy grinning jaws, just op'd to roar. Dryden.
Ill nature is not cured with a sop; quarrellous men, as well as quarrellous curs, are worse for fair usage. L'Estrange.
To Cerberus they give a sop, His tripple barking mouth to stop. Swift.
TO SOP. v. a. To steep in liquor.
SOPE. n. f. [See SOAP.]
SOPH. n. f. [from sophista, Latin.] A young man who has been two years at the university.
Three Cambridge sops and three pert templars came,
The same their talents, and their tastes the same;
Each prompt to query, answer, and debate,
And smit with love of pæsy and prate. Pope.
SO'PHI. n. f. [Persian.] The emperor of Persia.
By this scimitar That slew the sophi and a Persian prince. Shakspeare.
A fig for the sultan and sophi. Congreve.
SO'PHISM. n. f. [sophisma, Lat.] A fallacious argument; an unsound subtilty; a fallacy.

When a false argument puts on the appearance of a true one, then it is properly called a sophism or fallacy. Watts.
I, who as yet was never known to show False pity to premeditated woe, Will graciously explain great nature's laws, And hear thy sophisms in so plain a cause. Harte.
SO'PHIST. n. f. [sophista, Lat.] A professor of philosophy.
The court of Cæsus is said to have been much resorted to by the sophists of Greece, in the happy beginning of his reign. Temple.
SO'PHISTER. n. f. [sophiste, Fr. sophista, Latin.]
1. A disputant fallaciously subtle; an artful but insidious logician.
A subtle traitor needs no sophister. Shakspeare.
If a heathen philosopher brings arguments from reason, which none of our atheistical sophisters can confute, for the immortality of the soul, I hope they will so weigh the consequences, as neither to talk nor live as if there was no such thing. Denham.
Not all the subtle objections of sophisters and rabbies, against the gospel, so much prejudiced the reception of it, as the reproach of those crimes with which they aspersed the assemblies of christians. Rogers.
2. A professor of philosophy; a sophist.
This sense is antiquated.
Alcidimus the sophister hath arguments to prove, that voluntary and extemporal far excelleth premeditated speech. Hooker.
SOPHISTICAL. adj. [sophistique, Fr. from sophist.] Fallaciously subtle; logically deceitful.
Neither know I whether I should prefer for madness, and sophistical couzenage, that the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once of this sublimary world. Hall.
When the state of the controversy is well understood, the difficulty will not be great in giving answers to all his sophistical cavils. Stillingfleet.
That may seem a demonstration for the present, which to posterity will appear a mere sophistical knot. More.
SOPHISTICALLY. adv. [from sophistical.] With fallacious subtilty.
Bolingbroke argues most sophistically. Swift.
TO SOPHISTICATE. v. a. [sophistiquer, Fr. from sophist.] To adulterate; to corrupt with something spurious.
If the passions of the mind be strong, they easily sophistate the understanding; they make it apt to believe upon every slender warrant, and to imagine infallible truth where scarce any probable shew appeareth. Hooker.
Here's three of us are sophistated. Shakspeare.
Divers experiments succeeded not, because they were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophistated ones. Boyle.
The only persons amongst the heathens, who sophistated nature and philosophy, where the stoicks; who affirmed a fatal, unchangeable concatenation of causes, reaching even to the elicit acts of man's will. South.
Yet the rich cullies may their boasting spare;
They purchase but sophistated ware:
'Tis prodigality that buys deceit,
Where both the giver and the taker cheat. Dryden.
The eye hath its coats and humours transparent and colourless, lest it should tinge and sophistate the light that it lets in by a natural jaundice. Bentley.
SOPHISTICATE. part. adj. [from the verb.] Adulterate; not genuine.
Wine sparkles brighter far than she,
'Tis pure and right, without deceit,
And that no woman e'er will be;
No, they are all sophistate. Cowley.
Since then a great part of our scientific treasure is most likely to be adulterate, though all bears the image and superscription of truth; the only way to know what is sophistate and what is not so, is to bring all to the examen of the touchstone. Glanville.

So truth, when only one supplied the state,
Grew scarce and dear, and yet sophistate. Dryden.
SOPHISTICATION. n. f. [sophistication, Fr. from sophistate.] Adulteration; not genuineness.
Sophistication is the act of counterfeiting or adulterating any thing with what is not so good, for the sake of unlawful gain. Quincy.
The drugs and simples sold in shops generally are adulterated by the fraudulent avarice of the sellers, especially if the preciousness may make their sophistication very beneficial. Boyle.
Besides easy submission to sophistication of sense, we have inability to prevent the miscarriages of our junior reasons. Glanville.
SOPHISTICATOR. n. f. [from sophistate.] Adulterator; one that makes things not genuine.
SOPHISTRY. n. f. [from sophist.]
1. Fallacious ratiocination.
His sophistry prevailed; his father believed. Sidney.
These men have obscured and confounded the natures of things by their false principles and wretched sophistry; though an act be never so sinful, they will strip it of its guilt. South.
2. Logical exercise.
The more youthful exercises of sophistry, themes and declamations. Felton.
TO SOPORATE. v. n. [soporo, Lat.] To lay asleep. Di.
SOPORIFEROUS. adj. [sopor and fero.] Productive of sleep; causing sleep; narcotick; opiate; dormitive; somniferous; anodyne; sleepy.
The particular ingredients of those magical ointments are opiate and soporiferous; for anointing of the forehead, neck, feet, and back-bone, procures dead sleeps. Bacon.
While the whole operation was performing, I lay in a profound sleep, by the force of that soporiferous medicine infused into my liquor. Swift.
SOPORIFEROUSNESS. n. f. [from soporiferous.] The quality of causing sleep.
SOPORIFICK. adj. [sopor and facio.] Causing sleep; opiate; narcotick.
The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporifick or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities. Locke.
SO'PPER. n. f. [from sop.] One that sleeps any thing in liquor.
SORBE. n. f. [sorbum, Lat.] The berry of the forb or service-tree.
SO'RBILE. adj. [from sorbeo, Lat.] That may be drunk or sipped.
SORBITION. n. f. [sorbitio, Lat.] The act of drinking or sipping.
SO'RCERER. n. f. [forcier, Fr. fortarius, low Lat.] A conjurer; an enchanter; a magician.
They say this town is full of cozenage, As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye, Drug-working forcers that change the mind, Soul-killing witches that deform the body, And many such like libertines of sin. Shakspeare.
The weakness of the power of witches upon kings and magistrates may be ascribed to the weakness of imagination; for it is hard for a witch or a forcerer to put on a belief that they can hurt such. Bacon.
He saw a fable forcerer arise,
All sudden gorgons his, and dragons glare,
And ten horn'd fiends. Pope.
The Egyptian forcerers contended with Moles; but the wonders which Moses wrought did so far transcend the power of magicians, as made them confess it was the finger of God. Watts.
SO'RCERESS. n. f. [female of forcerer.] A female magician; an enchantress.
Bring forth that forceress condemn'd to burn. Shakspeare.

3. A poem; lay; strain.

The bard that first adorn'd our native tongue,
Tun'd to his British lyre this ancient song. Dryden.
There we a while will rest;
Our next ensuing song to wondrous things addrest. Drayton.

4. Poetry; poesy.

This subject for heroick song pleased me. Milton.

Names memorable long,
If there be force in virtue or in song. Pope.

5. Notes of birds.

The lark, the messenger of day,
Saluted in her song the morning grey. Dryden.

6. Old Song. A trifle.

I do not intend to be thus put off with an old song. Mere.
A hopeful youth, newly advanced to great honour, was forced by a cobbler to resign all for an old song. Addison.

SONGISH. adj. [from song.] Containing songs; consisting of songs. A low word.

The songish part must abound in the softness and variety of numbers, its intention being to please the hearing. Dryden.

If I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change caps. Camden.

The very sooth of it is, that an ill-habit has the force of an ill fate. L'Estrange.

I did not mean to chide you;
For, sooth to say, I hold it noble in you
To cherish the distress'd. Rowe.

SOOTH. adj. [roð, Sax.] Pleasing; delightful.

Some other means I have,
Which once of Melibæus old I learn'd,
The soothest shepherd that e'er pip'd on plains. Milton.

SOOTH. n. f. Sweetness; kindness. This seems to be the meaning here.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! Shakspeare.

TO SOOTH. v. a. [geroðian, Saxon.] 1. To flatter; to please with blandishments.

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shakspeare.

Can I sooth tyranny?

Seem pleas'd to see my royal master murder'd,
His crown usurp'd, a distaff in the throne? Dryden.

By his fair-daughter is the chief confin'd,
Who sooths to dear delight his anxious mind;
Successful all her soft caresses prove,
To banish from his breast his country's love. Pope.

Thinks he that Memnon, soldier as he is,
Thoughtless and dull, will listen to his soothing? Rowe.

I've tried the force of every reason on him,
Sooth'd and care's'd, been angry, sooth'd again;
Laid safety, life, and interest in his sight;
But all are vain, he scorns them all for Cato. Addison.

2. To calm; to soften; to mollify.

The beldame
Sooths her with blandishments, and frights with threats. Dryden.

3. To gratify; to please.

This calm'd his cares; sooth'd with his future fame,

And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden.

SO'OTHER. n. f. [from sooth.] A flatterer; one who gains by blandishments.

I cannot flatter: I defy

The tongues of soothsayers.

Shakspeare.

TO SOO'THSAY. v. n. [sooth and say.] To predict; to foretell.

A damsel, possessed with a spirit of divination, met us, which brought her matters much gain by soothsaying.

Acts.

SOO'THSAYER. n. s. [from soothsay.] A foreteller; a predictor; a prognosticator.

Scarce was Musidorus made partaker of this oft blinding light, when there were found numbers of soothsayers, who affirmed strange and incredible things should be performed by that child.

Sidney.

A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of March.

Shakspeare.

He was animated to expect the papacy by the prediction of a soothsayer, that one should succeed Pope Leo, whose name should be Adrian, an aged man of mean birth, and of great learning and wisdom.

Bacon.

SOO'TINESS. n. s. [from sooty.] The quality of being sooty; fuliginousness.

SOO'TY. adj. [from soot.]

There may be some chymical way so to defecate this oil, that it shall not spend into a sooty matter.

Wilkins.

3. Black; dark; dusky.

All the grisly legions that troop Under the sooty flag of Acheron; Harpies and hydras, and all monstrous forms.

Milton.

Swift on his sooty pinions flits the gnome, And in a vapour reach'd the gloomy dome.

Pope.

TO SOOTY. v. n. [from soot.] To make black with soot.

Then (for his own weeds) shirt and coat all rent, Tann'd and all sootied with noisome smoke She put him on; and over all a cloke.

Chapman.

SOP. n. s. [sop, Saxon; sopa, Spanish; soppe, Dutch.]

1. Any thing steeped in liquor, commonly to be eaten.

The bounded waters

Would lift their bosoms higher than the shores, And make a sop of all this solid globe.

Shakspeare.

Draw, you rogue! for though it be night, yet the moon shines: I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you.

Shakspeare.

Sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebrate more than wine of itself.

Bacon.

2. Any thing given to pacify, from the sop given to Cerberus.

The prudent Sibyl had before prepar'd A sop, in honey steep'd, to charm the guard; Which, mix'd with powerful drugs, she cast before His greedy grinning jaws, just op'd to roar.

Dryden.

Ill nature is not cured with a sop; quarrelsome men, as well as quarrelsome curs, are worse for fair usage.

L'Estrange.

To Cerberus they give a sop, His tripple barking mouth to stop.

Swift.

TO SOP. v. a. To steep in liquor.

SOPE. n. s. [See SOAP.]

SOPH. n. s. [from sophista, Latin.] A young man who has been two years at the university.

Three Cambridge sophs and three pert templars came,

The same their talents, and their tastes the same; Each prompt to query, answer, and debate, And smit with love of pœsy and prate.

Pope.

SO'PHI. n. s. [Persian.] The emperor of Persia.

By this scimitar

That slew the sopbi and a Persian prince.

Shaksp.

A fig for the sultan and sopbi.

Congreve.

SO'PHISM. n. s. [sophisma, Lat.] A fallacious argument; an unsound subtilty; a fallacy.

When a false argument puts on the appearance of a true one, then it is properly called a sophism or fallacy.

Watts.

I, who as yet was never known to show False pity to premeditated woe, Will graciously explain great nature's laws, And hear thy sophisms in so plain a cause.

Harte.

SO'PHIST. n. s. [sophista, Lat.] A professor of philosophy.

The court of Cræsus is said to have been much resorted to by the sophists of Greece, in the happy beginning of his reign.

Temple.

SO'PHISTER. n. s. [sophiste, Fr. sophista, Latin.]

1. A disputant fallaciously subtle; an artful but insidious logician.

A subtle traitor needs no sophister.

Shakspeare.

If a heathen philosopher brings arguments from reason, which none of our atheistical sophisters can confute, for the immortality of the soul, I hope they will so weigh the consequences, as neither to talk nor live as if there was no such thing.

Denham.

Not all the subtle objections of sophisters and rabbies, against the gospel, so much prejudiced the reception of it, as the reproach of those crimes with which they aspersed the assemblies of christians.

Rogers.

2. A professor of philosophy; a sophist. This sense is antiquated.

Alecidemus the sophister hath arguments to prove, that voluntary and extemporal far excelleth premeditated speech.

Hooker.

SOPHISTICAL. adj. [sophistique, Fr. from sophist.] Fallaciously subtle; logically deceitful.

Neither know I whether I should prefer for madness, and sophistical couzenage, that the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once of this sublimary world.

Hall.

When the state of the controversy is well understood, the difficulty will not be great in giving answers to all his sophistical cavils.

Stillingfleet.

That may seem a demonstration for the present, which to posterity will appear a mere sophistical knot.

Mere.

SOPHISTICALLY. adv. [from sophistical.] With fallacious subtilty.

Bolingbroke argues most sophistically.

Swift.

TO SOPHISTICATE. v. a. [sophistiquer, Fr. from sophist.] To adulterate; to corrupt with something spurious.

If the passions of the mind be strong, they easily sophisticate the understanding; they make it apt to believe upon every slender warrant, and to imagine infallible truth where scarce any probable shew appeareth.

Hooker.

Here 's three of us are sophisticated.

Shakspeare.

Divers experiments succeeded not, because they were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophisticated ones.

Boyle.

The only persons amongst the heathens, who sophisticated nature and philosophy, where the stoicks; who affirmed a fatal, unchangeable concatenation of causes, reaching even to the elicit acts of man's will.

South.

Yet the rich cullies may their boasting spare; They purchase but sophisticated ware:

'Tis prodigality that buys deceit, Where both the giver and the taker cheat.

Dryden.

The eye hath its coats and humours transparent and colourless, lest it should tinge and sophisticate the light that it lets in by a natural jaundice.

Bentley.

SOPHISTICATE. part. adj. [from the verb.] Adulterate; not genuine.

Wine sparkles brighter far than she, 'Tis pure and right, without deceit,

And that no woman e'er will be; No, they are all sophisticate.

Cowley.

Since then a great part of our scientific treasure is most likely to be adulterate, though all bears the image and superscription of truth; the only way to know what is sophisticate and what is not so, is to bring all to the examen of the touchstone.

Glanville.

So truth, when only one supplied the state, Grew scarce and dear, and yet sophisticate.

Dryden.

SOPHISTICATION. n. s. [sophistication, Fr. from sophisticate.] Adulteration; not genuineness.

Sophistication is the act of counterfeiting or adulterating any thing with what is not so good, for the sake of unlawful gain.

Quincy.

The drugs and simples sold in shops generally are adulterated by the fraudulent avarice of the sellers, especially if the preciousness may make their sophistication very beneficial.

Boyle.

Besides easy submission to sophistication of sense, we have inability to prevent the miscarriages of our junior reasons.

Glanville.

SOPHISTICA'TOR. n. s. [from sophisticate.] Adulterator; one that makes things not genuine.

SOPHISTRY. n. s. [from sophist.]

1. Fallacious ratiocination.

His sophistry prevailed; his father believed.

Sidney.

These men have obscured and confounded the natures of things by their false principles and wretched sophistry; though an act be never so sinful, they will strip it of its guilt.

South.

2. Logical exercise.

The more youthful exercises of sophistry, themes and declamations.

Felton.

TO SOPORATE. v. n. [soporo, Lat.] To lay asleep.

Diſt.

SOPORI'FEROUS. adj. [sopor and fero.] Productive of sleep; causing sleep; narcotick; opiate; dormitive; somniferous; anodyne; sleepy.

The particular ingredients of those magical ointments are opiate and soporiferous; for anointing of the forehead, neck, feet, and back-bone, procures dead sleeps.

Bacon.

While the whole operation was performing, I lay in a profound sleep, by the force of that soporiferous medicine infused into my liquor.

Swift.

SOPORI'FEROUSNESS. n. s. [from soporiferous.] The quality of causing sleep.

SOPORI'FICK. adj. [sopor and facio.] Causing sleep; opiate; narcotick.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporifick or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities.

Locke.

SO'R CERER. n. s. [forcier, Fr. fortiarius, low Lat.] A conjurer; an enchanter; a magician.

They say this town is full of cozenage, As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye, Drug-working forcers that change the mind, Soul-killing witches that deform the body, And many such like libertines of sin.

Shakspeare.

The weakness of the power of witches upon kings and magistrates may be ascribed to the weakness of imagination; for it is hard for a witch or a forcere to put on a belief that they can hurt such.

Bacon.

He saw a fable forcere arise, All sudden gorgons hiss, and dragons glare, And ten horn'd fiends.

Pope.

The Egyptian forcers contended with Moles; but the wonders which Moles wrought did so far transcend the power of magicians, as made them confess it was the finger of God.

Watts.

SO'R CERESS. n. s. [female of forcere.] A female magician; an enchantress.

Bring forth that *forcere*s condemn'd to burn.

Shakspeare.

Divers witches and forcereffes have fed upon man's flesh, to aid their imagination with high and foul vapours. Bacon.

The snaky forcereffes that sat just by hell-gate, and kept the fatal key, Ris'n, and with hideous outcry rush'd between. Milton.

How cunningly the forcereffes displays Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine! Milton.
SO'RCEROUS. adj. Containing enchantments. Not used.

Th' art ent'ring Circe's house,
Where by her med'cines, black and forcereous,
Thy souldiers all are shut in well-arm'd ities,
And turn'd to swine. Chapman.
SO'RCERY. n. f. Magick; enchantment; conjuration; witchcraft; charms.

This witch Sycorax,
For mischiefs manifold, and forceries terrible,
Was banish'd. Shakspeare.

Adders wisdom I have learn'd,
To fence my ears against thy forceries. Milton.
Actæon has long tracts of rich soil; but had the misfortune in his youth to fall under the power of forcery. Tatler.

The sea washes off the foil and sordes wherein mineral mosses were involved and concealed, and thereby renders them more conspicuous. Woodward.

SO'RDET. } n. f. [sourdine, Fr. sordina, SO'RDINE. } Italian.] A small pipe put into the mouth of a trumpet, to make it found lower or shriller. Bailey.

SO'RDID. adj. [sordidus, Lat.]
1. Foul; gross; filthy; dirty.

There Charon stands,
A sordid god; down from his hoary chin
A length of beard descends, uncomb'd, unclean. Dryden.

2. [sordide, Fr.] Intellectually dirty; mean; vile; base.

Thou canst not those exceptions make,
Which vulgar sordid mortals take. Cowley.
It is strange, since the priest's office heretofore was always splendid, that it is now looked upon as a piece of religion, to make it low and sordid. South.

3. [sordide, Fr.] Covetous; niggardly.

He may be old,
And yet not sordid, who refuses gold. Denham.
If one should cease to be generous and charitable, because another is sordid and ungrateful, it would be much in the power of vice to extinguish christian virtues. L'Estrange.

SO'RDIDLY. adv. [from sordid.] Meanly; poorly; covetously.

SO'RDIDNESS. n. f. [from sordid.]

1. Meanness; baseness.

I omit the madneses of Caligula's delights, and the execrable sordidness of those of Tiberius. Cowley.

2. Nastiness; not neatness.

Providence deters people from sluttishness and sordidness, and provokes them to cleanliness. Ray.

SORE. n. f. [Dan. saur, Danish.] A place tender and painful; a place excoriated; an ulcer. It is not used of a wound, but of a breach of continuity, either long continued, or from internal cause: to be a sore, there must be an excoriation; a tumour or bruise is not called a sore before some disruption happen.

Let us hence provide
A salve for any sore that may betide. Shakspeare.
Receipts abound; but searching all thy store,
The best is still at hand, to lance the sore,
And cut the head; for, till the core be found,
The secret vice is fed and gathers ground. Dryden.

By these all fest'ring sores her councils heal,
Which time or has disclos'd or shall reveal. Dryden.

Lice and flies, which have a most wonderful instinct to find out convenient places for the hatching and nourishing of their young, lay their eggs upon sores. Bentley.

SORE. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Tender to the touch. It has sometimes of before the causal noun.

We can ne'er be sure,
Whether we pain or not endure;
And just so far are sore and griev'd,
As by the fancy is believ'd. Hudibras.
While sore of battle, while our wounds are green,
Why should we tempt the doubtful die again? Dryden.

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes: If you have more pleasure in the taste of wine than in the use of your sight, wine is good; but if the pleasure of seeing be greater to you than that of drinking, wine is naught. Locke.

2. Tender in the mind; easily vexed.

Malice and hatred are very fretting and vexatious, and apt to make our minds sore and uneasy; but he that can moderate these affections will find ease in his mind. Tillotson.

Laugh at your friends; and, if your friends are sore,
So much the better, you may laugh the more. Pope.

3. Violent with pain; afflictively vehement. See SORE, adverb.

Threescore and ten I can remember well,
Within the volume of which time I've seen
Hours dreadful and things strange; but this sore night

Hath trifled former knowings. Shakspeare.
I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood. Shakspeare.

My loins are filled with a sore disease; and there is no whole part in my body. Common Prayer.
Sore hath been their fight,
As likeliest was, when two such foes met arm'd. Milton.

Gentle lady, may thy grave
Peace and quiet ever have;
After this day's travel sore,
Sweet rest seize thee ever more. Milton.

They are determined to live up to the holy rule, though sore evils and great temporal inconveniencies should attend the discharge of their duty. Atterbury.

4. Criminal. Out of use.

To lapse in fulness
Is sorer than to lye for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakspeare.

SORE. n. f. [from saur, French.]

The buck is called the first year a fawn; the second, a pricket; the third, a forel; and the fourth year, a sore. Shakspeare.

SORE. adv. [This the etymologists derive from seer, Dutch: but seer means only an intenseness of any thing; sore almost always includes pain.] Without painful or dangerous vehemence; in a very painful degree; with afflictive violence or pertinacity. It is now little used.

Thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore. Common Prayer.
The knight then lightly leaping to the prey,
With mortal steel him smote again so sore,
That headless his unwieldy body lay. Fairy Queen.
He this and that, and each man's blow
Doth eye, defend, and shift, being laid to sore. Daniel.

Though iron hew and mangle sore,
Would wounds and bruises honour more. Hudibras.
Distrust shook sore their minds. Milton.
So that, if Palamon were wounded sore,
Arcite was hurt as much. Dryden.
Sore sigh'd the knight, who this long sermon heard:
At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd. Dryden.

How, Didius, shall a Roman, sore repuls'd,
Greet your arrival to this distant isle?
How bid you welcome to these shatter'd legions? A. Philips.

SO'REHON. } n. f. [Irish and Scottish.] A SORN. } kind of arbitrary exaction or servile tenure, formerly in Scotland, as likewise in Ireland. Whenever a chieftain had a mind to revel, he came down among the tenants with his followers, by way of contempt called in the lowlands giliwittits, and lived on free quarters; so that ever since, when a person obtrudes himself upon another, stays at his house, and hangs upon him for bed and board, he is said to sorn, or be a forner. Macbean.

They exact upon them all kind of services; yea, and the very wild exactions, coignie, livery, and forebon; by which they poll and utterly undo the poor tenants and freeholders under them. Spenser.

SO'REL. n. f. [diminutive of sore.]

The buck is called the first year a fawn; the second, a pricket; the third, a forel. Shakspeare.

SO'RELY. adv. [from sore.]

1. With a great degree of pain or distress.
Here's the smell of the blood still; all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand: Oh! oh! oh!—What a sigh is there! the heart is sorely overcharged. Shakspeare.

Of the warrior train,
Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain. Dryden.

2. With vehemence dangerous or afflictive.

I have done ill,
Of which I do accuse myself so sorely,
That I will enjoy no more. Shakspeare.

SO'RENESS. n. f. [from sore.] Tenderness of a hurt.

He that, whilst the soreness of his late pangs of conscience remains, finds himself a little indisposed for sin, presently concludes repentance hath had its perfect work. Decay of Piety.

My foot began to swell, and the pain asswaged, though it left such a soreness, that I could hardly suffer the clothes of my bed. Temple.

SORITES. n. f. [σωρίτης.] Properly a heap. An argument where one proposition is accumulated on another.

Chrysippus the Stoick invented a kind of argument, consisting of more than three propositions, which is called sortes, or a heap. Dryden.

Sortes is when several middle terms are chosen to connect one another successively in several propositions, till the last proposition connects its predicate with the first subject. Thus, All men of revenge have their souls often uneasy; uneasy souls are a plague to themselves; now to be one's own plague is folly in the extreme. Watts.

SORO'RICIDE. [soror and cædo.] The murder of a sister.

SO'RRAGE. n. f. The blades of green wheat or barley. Diâ.

SO'RRANCE. n. f. [In farriery.] Any disease or sore in horses. Diâ.

SO'RREL. n. f. [rune, Sax. forel, Fr. oxalis, Lat.] This plant agrees with the dock in all its characters, and only differs in having an acid taste. Miller.

Of all roots of herbs the root of sorrel goeth the farthest into the earth. It is a cold and acid herb, that loveth the earth, and is not much drawn by the sun. Bacon.

Acid austere vegetables contract and strengthen the fibres, as all kinds of sorrel, the virtues of which lie in acid astringent salt, a sovereign antidote against the putrescent bilious alkali. Arbuthnot.

SO'RRILY. adv. [from sorry.] Meanly; despicably; wretchedly; pitiably.

Thy pipe, O Pan, shall help, though I sing sorribly. Sidney.

SO'RRINESS. n. f. [from sorry.] Mean-

SOR

ness; wretchedness; pitiableness; despicableness.

SORROW. n. f. [sorg, Danish.] Grief; pain for something past; sadness; mourning. Sorrow is not commonly understood as the effect of present evil, but of lost good.

Sorrow is uneasiness in the mind, upon the thought of a good lost, which might have been enjoyed longer; or the sense of a present evil. Locke.

Sorrow on thee, on all the pack of you;

That triumph thus upon my misery! Shakspeare.

A world of woe and sorrow. Milton.

Some other hour I will to tears allow;

But, having you, can show no sorrow now. Dryden.

TO SORROW. v. n. [saurgan, Gothick; rongian, Saxon.] To grieve; to be sad; to be dejected.

The miserable change, now at my end,
Lament nor sorrow at. Shakspeare.

Wherever sorrow is, relief would be;

If you do sorrow at my grief in love,

By giving love, your sorrow and my grief

Were both extermin'd. Shakspeare.

Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance. 2 Corinthians.

I neither fear to die, nor desire to live; and having mastered all grief in myself, I desire no man to sorrow for me. Hayward.

Send them forth, though sorrowing, yet in peace.

Milton.

Sad the prince explores

The neighb'ring main, and sorrowing treads the shores. Pope.

SORROWED. adj. [from sorrow.] Accompanied with sorrow. Out of use.

Now the publick body, which doth seldom

Play the recanter, feeling in itself

A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal

Of its own fall, restraining aid to Timon;

And sends forth us to make their sorrowed tender.

Shakspeare.

SORROWFUL. adj. [sorrow and full.]

1. Sad for something past; mournful;

grieving.

Blessed are they which have been sorrowful for all thy sourges; for they shall rejoice for thee, when they have seen all thy glory. Tobias.

2. Deeply serious. Not in use.

Hannah said, No, my lord, I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit: I have poured out my soul before the Lord. 1 Samuel.

3. Expressing grief; accompanied with grief.

The things that my soul refused to touch, are as my sorrowful meat. Job.

SORRY. adj. [sarig, Saxon.]

1. Grieved for something past. It is generally used of slight or casual miscarriages or vexations, but sometimes of greater things. It does not imply any long continuance of grief.

O, forget

What we are sorry for ourselves in thee.

Timon of Athens.

The king was sorry: nevertheless, for the oath's sake, he commanded the Baptist's head to be given her. Matthew.

I'm sorry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure.

Shakspeare.

We are sorry for the satire interspersed in some of these pieces, upon a few people, from whom the highest provocations have been received. Swift.

2. [from saur, filth, Islandick.] Vile;

worthless; vexatious.

How now, why do you keep alone?

Of sorriest fancies your companions making,

Using those thoughts which should indeed have died

With them they think on. Shakspeare.

If the union of the parts consist only in rest, it would seem that a bag of dust would be of as firm

a consistence as that of marble; and Bajazet's cage had been but a sorry prison. Glauville.

SOR

Coarse complexions,
And cheeks of sorry grain, will serve to ply
The sampler, and to teize the housewife's wool.

Milton.

How vain were all the ensigns of his power, that could not support him against one slighting look of a sorry slave! L'Estrange.

If this innocent had any relation to his Thebais, the poet might have found some sorry excuse for determining the reader. Dryden.

If such a slight and sorry business as that could produce one organical body, one might reasonably expect, that now and then a dead lump of dough might be leavened into an animal. Bentley.

SORT. n. f. [sorte, French.]

1. A kind; a species.

Disfigur'd more than spirit of happy sort. Milton.

A substantial and unaffected piety not only gives a man a credit among the sober and virtuous, but even among the vicious sort of men. Tillotson.

These three sorts of poems should differ in their numbers, designs, and every thought. Walsh.

Endeavouring to make the signification of specifick names clear, they make their specifick ideas of the sorts of substances of a few of those simple ideas found in them. Locke.

2. A manner; a form of being or acting.

Flowers, in such sort worn, can neither be smelt nor seen well by those that wear them. Hooker.

That I may laugh at her in equal sort

As she doth laugh at me, and makes my pain her sport. Spenser.

To Adam in what sort shall I appear? Milton.

3. A degree of any quality.

I have written the more boldly unto you, in some sort, as putting you in mind. Romans.

I shall not be wholly without praise, if in some sort I have copied his stile. Dryden.

4. A class or order of persons.

The one being a thing that belongeth generally unto all; the other, such as none but the wiser and more judicious sort can perform. Hooker.

I have bought

Golden opinions from all sorts of people. Shakspeare.

The first sort by their own suggestion fell. Milton.

Hospitality to the better sort, and charity to the poor; two virtues that are never exercised so well as when they accompany each other. Atterbury.

5. A company; a knot of people.

Mine eyes are full of tears: I cannot see;

And yet salt water blinds them not so much,

But they can see a sort of traitors here. Shakspeare.

A sort of lusty shepherds strive. Waller.

6. Rank; condition above the vulgar.

Is signior Montanto returned from the wars?—I know none of that name, lady; there was none such in the army of any sort. Shakspeare.

7. [sort, French; sortes, Latin.] A lot.

Out of use.

Make a lott'ry,

And by decree let blockish Ajax

Draw the sort to fight with Hector. Shakspeare.

8. A pair; a set; a suit.

TO SORT. v. a. [sortiri, Latin; assortire,

Italian.]

1. To separate into distinct and proper classes.

I come to thee for charitable licence,

To sort our nobles from our common men. Shakspeare.

A piece of cloth made of white and black threads,

though the whole appear neither white nor black,

but grey, yet each remains what it was before, if the threads were pulled asunder, and sorted each colour by itself. Boyle.

Shell-fish have been, by some of the ancients,

compared and sorted with the insects. Bacon.

With this desire, she hath a native might

To find out ev'ry truth, if she had time;

Th' innumerable effects to sort aright,

And by degrees from cause to cause to climb.

Davies.

The number of simple ideas, that make the nominal essence of the lowest species, or first sorting of individuals, depends on the mind of man. Locke.

The rays which differ in refrangibility may be parted and sorted from one another; and that either by refraction, or by reflexion. Newton.

SOR

But grant that actions best discover man,
Take the most strong, and sort them as you can:
The few that glare, each character must mark:
You balance not the many in the dark. Pope.

2. To reduce to order from a state of confusion.

These they sorted into their several times and places; some to begin the service of God with, and some to end; some to be interlaced between the divine readings of the law and prophets. Hooker.

Let me not be light;

For a light wife doth make a heavy husband;

And never be Bassanio so from me;

But God sort all! Shakspeare.

3. To conjoin; to put together in distribution.

For, when the sorts things present with things past,

And thereby things to come doth oft foresee;

When she doth doubt at first, and chuse at last,

These acts her own, without her body, be. Davies.

The swain perceiving, by her words ill sorted,

That she was wholly from herself transported.

Brown.

4. To cull; to choose; to select.

Send his mother to his father's house,

That he may sort her out a worthy spouse. Chapm.

TO SORT. v. n.

1. To be joined with others of the same species.

Nor do metals only sort and herd with metals in the earth, and minerals with minerals; but both in common together. Woodward.

2. To consort; to join.

The illiberality of parents towards their children, makes them base, and sort with any company.

Bacon.

3. To suit; to fit.

A man cannot speak to a son but as a father;

whereas a friend may speak as the case requires, and not as it sorteth with the person. Bacon.

They are happy whose natures sort with their vocations. Bacon.

Among unequals, what society

Can sort, what harmony, or true delight?

Which must be mutual, in proportion due

Giv'n and receiv'd. Milton.

The Creator calling forth by name

His mighty angels, gave them several charge,

As sorted best with present things. Milton.

For diff'rent files with diff'rent subjects sort;

As several garbs with country, town, and court.

Pope.

4. [sortir, to issue, French.] To terminate;

to issue.

It sorted not to any fight, but to a retreat. Bacon.

Princes cannot gather this fruit, except they raise some persons to be companions; which many times sorteth to inconvenience. Bacon.

5. To have success; to terminate in the effect desired.

The slips of their vines have been brought into

Spain, but they have not sorted to the same purpose

as in their native country. Abbot.

It was tried in a blown bladder, whereinto flesh and a flower were put, and it sorted not; for dry bladders will not blow, and new bladders further putrefaction. Bacon.

6. To fall out. [from sort, a lot, French.]

And so far am I glad it did so sort,

As this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shakspeare.

SORTAL. adj. A word formed by Locke,

but not yet received.

As things are ranked under names, into sorts or species, only as they agree to certain abstract ideas, the essence of each sort comes to be nothing but that idea which the sortal, if I may so call it from sort,

as I do general from genus, name stands for. Locke.

SORTANCE. n. f. [from sort.] Suitable-ness; agreement.

Here doth he wish his person, with such power

As might hold sortance with his quality,

The which he could not levy. Shakspeare.

SORTILEGE. n. f. [sortilege, French; sorti- legium, Latin.] The act or practice of drawing lots.

S O T

So'RTMENT. n. f. [from fort.]

1. The act of fortifying; distribution.
2. A parcel sorted or distributed.

To Soss. v. n. [a cant word.] To sit lazily on a chair; to fall at once into a chair.

The winter sky began to frown;
Poor Stella must pack off to town;
From wholesome exercise and air
To soffing in an easy chair. Swift.

Sot. n. f. [rot, Saxon; sof, French; sof, Dutch.]

1. A blockhead; a dull, ignorant, stupid fellow; a dolt.

Of the loyal service of his son
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot,
And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out. Shakspeare.

Either our brags
Were crackt of kitchen trulls, or his description
Prov'd us unspeaking sots. Shakspeare.
Soul blinded sots, that creep
In dirt, and never saw the wonders of the deep. Drayton.

Tell him that no history or antiquity can match his conduct; and presently the sot, because he knows neither history nor antiquity, shall begin to measure himself by himself, which is the only sure way for him not to fall short. South.

2. A wretch stupified by drinking.

Every sign
That calls the staring sots to nasty wine. Roscommon.
A furly ill-bred lord,
That chides and snaps her up at every word;
A brutal sot, who, while she holds his head,
With drunken filth bedaubes the nuptial bed. Granville.

To Sot. v. a. To stupify; to besot; to infatuate.

I hate to see a brave bold fellow sotted,
Made sour and senseless, turn'd to whey, by love;
A driveling hero, fit for a romance. Dryden.
The potion
Turns his brain, and stupifies his mind;
The sotted moon-calf gapes. Dryden.

To Sot. v. n. To tittle to stupidity.

So'TTISH. adj. [from sot.]

1. Dull; stupid; senseless; infatuate; doltish.

All's but naught:
Patience is sottish, and impatience does Become a dog that's mad. Shakspeare.
Upon the report of his approach, more than half fell away and dispersed; the residue, being more desperate or more sottish, did abide in the field, of whom many were slain. Hayward.

He gain'd a king
Ahaz his sottish conqueror. Milton.
'Tis sottish to offer at things that cannot be brought about. L'Estrange.

The inhabitants of Soldania in Africk are so sottish and grossly ignorant, that they differ very little from brutes. Wilkins.

How ignorant are sottish pretenders to astrology!
Swift.

2. Dull with intemperance.

So'TTISHLY. adv. [from sottish.] Stupidly; dully; senselessly.

Northumberland, sottishly mad with over great fortune, procured the king, by his letters patent under the great seal, to appoint the lady Jane to succeed him in the inheritance of the crown. Hayward.

Atheism is impudent in pretending to philosophy;
and superstition sottishly ignorant, in fancying that the knowledge of nature tends to irreligion. Glanv.

So sottishly to lose the purest pleasures and comforts of this world, and forego the expectation of immortality in another; and so desperately to run the risk of dwelling with everlasting burnings, plainly discovers itself to be the most pernicious folly and deplorable madness in the world. Bentley.

So'TTISHNESS. n. f. [from sottish.]

1. Dulness; stupidity; insensibility.

S O V

Sometimes phlegm putrifies into sottishness, sottishness into an ignorance or neglect of all religion, Holyday.

Few consider what a degree of sottishness and confirmed ignorance men may sin themselves into.
South.

The first part of the text, the folly and sottishness of atheism, will come home to their case; since they make such a noisy pretence to wit and sagacity.
Bentley.

2. Drunken stupidity.

No sober temperate person can look with any complacency upon the drunkenness and sottishness of his neighbour. South.

SOUCE. n. f. See SOUSE.

So'VEREIGN. adj. [souverain, Fr. souvrain, Spanish.]

1. Supreme in power; having no superior.

As teaching bringeth us to know that God is our supreme truth; so prayer testifieth that we acknowledge him our sovereign good. Hooker.

You, my sovereign lady,
Causeless have laid disgraces on my head. Shakspeare.
None of us who now thy grace implore,
But held the rank of sovereign queen before;
Till giddy chance, whose malice never bears
That mortal bliss should last for length of years,
Cast us down headlong from our high estate. Dryden.
Whether Esau, then, were a vassal to Jacob, and Jacob his sovereign prince by birthright, I leave the reader to judge. Locke.

2. Supremely efficacious; predominant over diseases.

A memorial of fidelity and zeal, a sovereign preservative of God's people from the venomous infection of heresy. Hooker.

The most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empirick; and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse drench. Shakspeare.

Love-wounded Protheus,
My bosom, as a bed,
Shall lodge thee, till thy wound be thoroughly heal'd,
And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss. Shakspeare.

A water we call water of paradise, by that we do to it, is made very sovereign for health. Bacon.

Like the scum starv'd men did draw
From parboil'd shoes and boots, and all the rest
Which were with any sovereign fatness blest. Donne.
Be cool, my friend, and hear my muse dispense
Some sovereign comforts drawn from common sense.
Dryden.

So'VEREIGN. n. f. Supreme lord.

O, let my sovereign turn away his face,
And bid his ears a little while be deaf. Shakspeare.
By my sovereign, and his fate, I swear,
Renown'd for faith in peace, for force in war,
Oft our alliance other lands desir'd. Dryden.

So'VEREIGNLY. adv. [from sovereign.]
Supremely; in the highest degree.

He was sovereignly lovely in himself. Boyle.

So'VEREIGNTY. n. f. [souveraineté, Fr.]
Supremacy; highest place; supreme power; highest degree of excellence.

Give me pardon,
That I, your vassal, have employ'd and pain'd
Your unknown sovereignty. Shakspeare.

Happy were England, would this virtuous prince Take on his grace the sovereignty thereof. Shakspeare.

To give laws unto a people, to institute magistrates and officers over them; to punish and pardon male-factors; to have the sole authority of making war and peace, are the true marks of sovereignty. Davies.

A mighty hunter thence he shall be stil'd
Before the Lord; as in despite of heav'n,
Or from heav'n, claiming second sovereignty. Milton.

Nothing does so gratify a haughty humour, as this piece of usurped sovereignty over our brethren.
Government of the Tongue.

Jove's own tree,
That holds the woods in awful sovereignty,
Requires a depth of lodging in the ground;
High as his topmost boughs to heav'n ascend,
So low his roots to hell's dominion tend. Dryden.

S O U

I well foresee, when'er thy suit I grant,
That I my much-lov'd sovereignty shall want,
And her new beauty may thy heart invade. Dryden.
Let us above all things possess our souls with awful apprehensions of the majesty and sovereignty of God.
Rogers.

Alexander's Grecian colonies in the Indies were almost exterminated by Sandrocottus; Seleucus recovered the sovereignty in some degree, but was forced to abandon to him the country along the Indus. Arbutnot.

SOUGH. n. f. [from sous, French.] A subterraneous drain.

Yet could not such mines, without great pains and charges, if at all, be wrought; the delfs would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any addits or soughs to drain them, that no gins or machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry.
Ray.

Another was found in sinking a sough-pit.
Woodward.

SOUGHT. The pret. and part. pass. of seek.
I am sought of them that asked not for me: I am found of them that sought me not. Isaiah.

SOUL. n. f. [rapel, Saxon; sael, Danish;
suul, Islandick; siel, Dutch.]

1. The immaterial and immortal spirit of man.

When death was overcome, he opened heaven as well to the believing Gentiles as Jews: heaven till then was no receptacle to the souls of either. Hooker.

Perhaps, for want of food, the soul may pine;
But that were strange, since all things bad and good,
Since all God's creatures mortal and divine,
Since God himself, is her eternal food. Davies.

He remembered them of the promises, seals, and oaths, which by publick authority had passed for concluding this marriage; that these, being religious bonds betwixt God and their souls, could not by any politick act of state be dissolved. Hayward.

So natural is the knowledge of the soul's immortality, and of some ubi for the future reception of it, that we find some tract or other of it in most barbarous nations. Heylin.

2. Intellectual principle.

Eloquence the soul, song charms the sense. Mih.
The eyes of our souls only then begin to see, when our bodily eyes are closing. Low.

3. Vital principal.

Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals insule themselves
Into the trunks of men. Shakspeare.
Thou sun, of this great world both eye and soul.
Milton.

Join voices, all ye living souls! ye birds,
That singing up to heaven-gate ascend,
Bear on your wings, and in your notes, his praise.
Milton.

In common discourse and writing we leave out the words vegetative, sensitive, and rational; and make the word soul serve for all these principles.
Watts.

4. Spirit; essence; quintessence; principal part.

He has the very soul of bounty. Shakspeare.
Charity, the soul of all the rest. Milton.

5. Interior power.

There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly distil it out. Shakspeare.

6. A familiar appellation expressing the qualities of the mind.

Three wenches where I stood, cry'd,
"Alas, good soul!" Shakspeare.
This is a poor mad soul; and she says, up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you.
Shakspeare.

The poor soul fat singing by a sycamore tree,
Sing all a green willow:
Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee.
Shakspeare.

Keep the poor soul no longer in suspense,
Your charge is such as does not need defence. Dryden.
Unenlarged souls are disgusted with the wonders of the microscope, discovering animals which equal not a peppercorn. Watts.

7. Human being.

The moral is the case of every soul of us.

L'Estrange.

It is a republic; there are in it a hundred bourgeois, and about a thousand souls.

Addison.

My state of health none care to learn;

My life is here no soul's concern.

Swift.

8. Active power.

Earth, air, and seas through empty space would rowl,

And heav'n would fly before the driving soul.

Dryden.

9. Spirit; fire; grandeur of mind.

That he wants caution, he must needs confess;

But not a soul, to give our arms success.

Young.

10. Intelligent being in general.

Every soul in heav'n shall bend the knee.

Milton.

SOU'LDIER. See SOLDIER.

SOU'LED. adj. [from soul.] Furnished with mind.

Gripping, and still tenacious of thy hold,

Wouldst thou the Grecian chiefs, though largely soul'd,

Should give the prizes they had gain'd before?

Dryden.

SOU'LESS. adj. [from soul.] Mean; low; spiritless.

Slave, soulless villain, dog, O rarely base!

Shakspeare.

SOU'LSHOT. n. f. [soul and shot.] Something paid for a soul's requiem among the Romanists.

In the Saxon times there was a funeral duty to be paid, called pecunia sepulchralis & symbolum anime, and in Saxon soulshot.

Ayliffe.

SOUND. adj. [r $\ddot{u}$ nd, Saxon.]

1. Healthy; hearty; not morbid; not diseased; not hurt.

I am fall'n out with my more headier will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit
For the sound man.

Shakspeare.

He hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks.

Shakspeare.

He hath received him safe and sound.

Luke.

We can preserve

Unhurt our minds, and understanding sound.

Milt.

The king visits all around,

Comforts the sick, congratulates the sound;

Honours the princely chiefs.

Dryden.

But Capys, and the rest of founder mind,

The fatal present to the flames design'd,

Or to the deep.

Dryden.

When a word, which originally signifies any particular object, is attributed to several other objects, on account of some evident reference or relation to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; so a sound or healthy pulse, a sound digestion, sound sleep, are all so called, with reference to a sound and healthy constitution; but if you speak of sound doctrine, or sound speech, this is by way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical.

Watts.

2. Right; not erroneous; orthodox.

Whom although to know be life, and joy to make mention of his name; yet our soundest knowledge is to know that we know him not as indeed he is, neither can know him; and our safest eloquence concerning him is silence.

Hooker.

Let my heart be sound in thy statutes.

Psalms.

Sound, and yet not trivial, catechetick institution.

Felton.

The rules are sound and useful, and may serve your devotion.

Wake.

3. Stout; strong; lusty.

The men are very strong and able of body; and therefore either give sound strokes with their clubs wherewith they fight, or else shoot strong shots with their bows.

Abbot.

Valid; not failing.

They reserved their titles, tenures, and signories whole and sound to themselves.

Spenser.

5. Fast; hearty. It is applied to sleep.

New wak'd from soundest sleep,
Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid
In balmy sweat.

Milton.

SOUND. adv. Soundly; heartily; completely fast.

The messenger approaching to him spake,
But his waste words return'd to him in vain;
So sound he slept that nought might him awake.

Fairy Queen.

SOUND. n. f. [sonde, French.] A shallow sea, such as may be founded.

The sound of Denmark, where ships pay toll.

Cumden.

Wake,

Behold I come, sent from the Stygian sound,

As a dire vapour that had cleft the ground,

T'ingender with the night, and blast the day.

Ben Jonson.

Him young Thoösa bore, the bright increate

Of Phorcys, dreaded in the sounds and seas.

Pope.

SOUND. n. f. [sonde, French.] A probe, an instrument used by chirurgeons to feel what is out of reach of the fingers.

And find 'em ripe for a revolt.

Addison.

To SOUND. v. n. To try with the sounding line.

The shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country, and sounded, and found it near twenty fathoms.

Acts.

Beyond this we have no more a positive distinct notion of infinite space than a mariner has of the depth of the sea, where having let down a large portion of his sounding line, he reaches no bottom.

Locke.

SOUND. n. f. [sepia, Latin.] The cuttlefish.

Ainsworth.

SOUND. n. f. [son, Fr. sonus, Latin.]

1. Any thing audible; a noise; that which is perceived by the ear.

Heaps of huge words uphoarded hideously
With horrid sound, though having little sense,
And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marr'd the face of goodly poesy,
And made a monster of their fantasy.

Spenser.

Come, sisters, cheer we up his sprights,

And shew the best of our delights;

I'll charm the air to give a sound,

While you perform your antick round.

Shakspeare.

Dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, and it maketh a sound: so a long pole struck upon gravel, in the bottom of the water, maketh a sound.

Bacon.

The warlike sound of trumpets loud.

Milton.

Whene'er he spake, his voice was heard around,

Loud as a trumpet with a silver sound.

Dryden.

That which is conveyed into the brain by the ear is called sound; though, till it affect the perceptive part, it be nothing but motion.

Locke.

2. Mere empty noise opposed to meaning.

He contented himself with doubtful and general terms, which might make no ill sound in men's ears.

Locke.

Let us consider this proposition as to its meaning; for it is the sense and not sound that must be the principle.

Locke.

O lavish land! for sound at such expence?

But then, she saves it in her bills for sense.

Young.

To SOUND. v. n.

1. To make a noise; to emit a noise.

Trumpet once more to sound at general doom.

Milton.

That with one blast through the whole house does bound,

And first taught speaking-trumpets how to sound.

Dryden.

Thither the silver sounding lyres

Shall call the smiling loves and young desires.

Pope.

2. To exhibit by sound, or likeness of sound.

Why do you start, and seem to fear

Things that do sound so fair?

Shakspeare.

They being told there was small hope of ease

To be expected to their evils from hence,

Were willing at the first to give an ear

To any thing that sounded liberty.

Ben Jonson.

This relation sounds rather like a chymical dream than a philosophical truth.

Wilkins.

3. To be conveyed in sound.

From you sounded out the word of the Lord.

1 Thessalonians.

With other halbers made me soundly fast.

Chapman.

Who had so often in your aid

So many ways been soundly paid.

Hudibras.

Have no concern,

Provided Punch, for there's the jest,

Be soundly maul'd, and plague the rest.

Swift.

Their nobility and gentry are one half ruined, banished, or converted: they all soundly feel the smart of the last Irish war.

Swift.

3. Truly; rightly.

The wisest are always the readiest to acknowledge, that soundly to judge of a law is the weightiest thing which any man can take upon him.

Hooker.

The doctrine of the church of England, expressed in the thirty-nine articles, is so soundly and orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without ex-trême danger to our religion.

Bacon.

4. Fast; closely: it is used of sleeping.

Now when that idle dream was to him brought,

Unto that elfen knight he bad him fly,

Where he slept soundly, void of evil thought.

I would I had that corporal soundness now,
As when thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiership. Shakspeare.

2. Truth; rectitude; incorrupt state.

In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the sway of time: other odds there was none amongst them, saving only that some fell sooner away, and some later, from the soundness of belief. Hooker.

Lessly is misled in his politicks; but he hath given proof of his soundness in religion. Swift.

As the health and strength, or weakness, of our bodies, is very much owing to their methods of treating us when we were young; so the soundness or folly of our minds is not less owing to those first tempers and ways of thinking, which we eagerly received from the love, tenderness, authority, and constant conversation of our mothers. Law.

3. Strength; solidity.

This presupposed, it may stand then very well with strength and soundness of reason, even thus to answer. Hooker.

SOUP. n. f. [soupe, Fr.] Strong decoction of flesh for the table.

Spongy morells in strong ragouts are found,
And in the soup the slimy snail is drown'd. Gay.

with astringency, as vinegar, or unripe fruit.

All sour things, as vinegar, provoke appetite. Bacon.

Their drink is sour. Hofea.

But let the bounds of licences be fix'd;
Not things of disagreeing natures mix'd,
Not sweet with sour, nor birds with serpents join'd. Dryden.

Both ways deceitful is the wine of pow'r;
When new 'tis heady, and when old 'tis sour. Harte.

2. Harsh of temper; crabbed; peevish;
morose; severe.

He was a scholar,
Lofty and sour to them that lov'd him not. Shakspeare.

A man of pleasant and popular conversation, rather free than sour and reserved. Wotton.

Tiberius, otherwise a very sour man, would punctually perform this rite unto others, and expect the same. Brown.

3. Afflictive; painful.

Let me embrace these sour adversities;
For wise men say it is the wisest course. Shakspeare.

4. Expressing discontent.

He said a sour thing to Laura the other day. Tatler.

Sullen and sour, with discontented mien Jocasta frown'd. Pope.

The lord treasurer often looked on me with a sour countenance. Swift.

SOUR. n. f. [from the adjective.] Acid substance.

A thousand sours to temper with one sweet,
To make it seem more dear and dainty. Spenser.

To SOUR. v. a.

1. To make acid.

His angelick nature had none of that carnal leaven which ferments to the souring of ours. Decay of Piety.

Thus kneaded up with milk, the new made man
His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
Till knowledge misapplied, misunderstood,
And pride of empire, sour'd his balmy blood. Dryden.

One passion, with a different turn,
Makes wit inflame or anger burn:
So the sun's heat, with diff'rent pow'rs, Ripens the grape, the liquor sours. Swift.

2. To make harsh, or unkindly.

Tufts of grass sour land. Mortimer.

3. To make uneasy; to make less pleasing.

Hail, great king!

To sour your happiness, I must report
The queen is dead. Shakspeare.

He brought envy, malice, and ambition, into paradise, which soured to him the sweetness of the place. Dryden.

4. To make discontented.

Not my own disgrace

Hath ever made me sour my patient cheek,
Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face. Shakspeare.

Three crabbed months had sour'd themselves to death,

Ere I could make thee open thy white hand. Shakspeare.

In me, as yet, ambition had no part;
Pride had not sour'd, nor wrath debas'd, my heart. Harte.

To SOUR. v. n.

1. To become acid.

Asses milk, when it sours in the stomach, and whey turned sour, will purge strongly. Arbutnot.

2. To grow peevish or crabbed.

To keep out melancholy from the virtuous, and hinder the hatred of vice from souring into severity. Addison.

If I turn my eyes from them, or seem displeased, they sour upon it. Addison.

SOURCE. n. f. [source, Fr.]

1. Spring; fountain; head.

Kings that rule

Behind the hidden sources of the Nile. Addison.

2. Original; first cause.

This second source of men, while yet but few,
With some regard to what is just and right Shall lead their lives. Milton.

This is the true source and original of this mischief. South.

Of himself is none;

But that eternal Infinite, and One,
Who never did begin, who ne'er can end,
On him all beings, as their source, depend. Dryden.

3. First producer.

Famous Greece,

That source of art and cultivated thought,
Which they to Rome, and Romans hither, brought. Waller.

So'URDET. n. f. [from sourd, Fr.] The little pipe of a trumpet.

SOU'RISH. adj. [from sour.] Somewhat sour.

By distillation we obtain a sourish spirit, which will dissolve coral. Boyle.

So'URLY. adv. [from sour.]

1. With acidity.

2. With acrimony.

The stern Athenian prince
Then sourly smil'd. Dryden.

So'URNES. n. f. [from sour.]

1. Acidity; austereness of taste.

Sourness consisteth in some grossness of the body;
and incorporation doth make the mixture of the body more equal, which induceth a milder taste. Bacon.

I' th' spring, like youth, it yields an acid taste;
But summer doth, like age, the sourness waste. Denham.

He knew

For fruit the grafted peer-tree to dispose,
And tame to plumbs the sourness of the sloes. Dryden.

Of acid or sour one has a notion from taste, sour-ness being one of those simple ideas which one cannot describe. Arbutnot.

Has life no sourness, drawn so near its end? Pope.

2. Asperity; harshness of temper.

Pelagius carped at the curious neatness of men's apparel in those days, and, through the sourness of his disposition, spoke somewhat too hardly thereof. Hooker.

He was never thought to be of that superstitious sourness, which some men pretend to in religion. King Charles.

Her religion is equally free from the weakness of superstition and the sourness of enthusiasm: it is not of an uncomfortable melancholy nature. Addison.

Take care that no sourness and moroseness mingle with our serious frame of mind. Nelson.

So'URSOP. n. f. [guanabanus, Lat.] Custard-apple.

It grows in several parts of the Spanish West-Indies, where it is cultivated for its fruits. Miller.

tion of money.

SOUSE. n. f. [soute, salt, Dutch.]

1. Pickle made of salt.

2. Any thing kept parboiled in salt pickle.
And he that can rear up a pig in his house,
Hath cheaper his bacon, and sweeter his souse. Tuffer.

All-faints, do lay for pork and souse,
For sprats and spurlings for your house. Tuffer.

To SOUSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To parboil, or steep in pickle.

Oil, though it stink, they drop by drop impart;
But souse the cabbage with a bounteous heart. Pope.

2. To throw into water. A ludicrous sense.

They soused me into the Thames with as little remorse as they drown blind puppies. Shakspeare.

Who those were that run away,
And yet gave out th' had won the day;
Although the rabble sous'd them for't
O'er head and ears in mud and dirt. Butler.

They soused me over head and ears in water when a boy, so that I am now one of the most case-hardened of the Ironsides. Addison.

To SOUSE. v. n. [Of this word I know not the original: it must come from sous, or deffous, down, Fr.] To fall as a bird on its prey.

Thus on some silver swan or tim'rous hare,
Jove's bird comes soufing down from upper air;
Her crooked talons trust the fearful prey,
Then out of sight she soars. Dryden.

Jove's bird will souse upon th' tim'rous hare,
And tender kids with his sharp talons tear. Dryden, jun.

To SOUSE. v. a. To strike with sudden violence, as a bird strikes his prey.

The gallant monarch is in arms;
And like an eagle o'er his airy tow'rs,
To souse annoyance that comes near his nest. Shakspeare.

SOUSE. adv. With sudden violence. A low word.

Such make a private study of the street,
And, looking full at ev'ry man they meet,
Run souse against his chaps, who stands amaz'd,
To find they did not see, but only gaz'd. Young.

So'UTERRAIN. n. f. [souterrain, Fr.] A grotto or cavern in the ground. Not English.

Defences against extremities of heat, as shade, grottos, or souterrains, are necessary preservatives of health. Arbutnot.

SOUTH. n. f. [ruð, Sax. syud, Dutch;
sud, French.]

1. The part where the sun is to us at noon:
opposed to north.

East and west have no certain points of heaven, but north and south are fixed; and seldom the far southern people have invaded the northern, but contrariwise. Bacon.

2. The southern regions of the globe.

The queen of the south. Bible.

From the north to call Decrepit winter, from the south to bring Solstitial summer's heat. Milton.

3. The wind that blows from the south.

All the contagion of the south light on you,
You shames of Rome, you? Shakspeare.

SOUTH. adj. [from the noun.] Southern; meridional.

One inch of delay more is a south sea. Shakspeare.
How thy garments are warm, when he quieteth
the earth by the south wind. Job.
Mean while the south wind arose, and with black wings,
Wide hovering, all the clouds together drove. Milton.

SOUTH. adv.

1. Toward the south.

His regiment lies half a mile south from the mighty power of the king. Shakspeare.

2. From the south.

Such fruits as you appoint for long keeping, gather in a fair and dry day, and when the wind bloweth not south. Bacon.

SOUTHEAST. n. f. [south and east.] The point between the east and south; the point of winter sunrise.

The planting of trees warm upon a wall against the south or southeast sun, doth hasten their ripening. Bacon.

The three seas of Italy, the Inferiour towards the southeast, the Ionian towards the south, and the Adriatick on the northeast side, were commanded by three different nations. Arbutnot.

SOUTHERLY. adj. [from south.]

1. Belonging to any of the points denominated from the south; not absolutely southern.

2. Lying toward the south.

Unto such as live under the pole, that is only north which is above them, that is only southerly which is below them. Brown.

Two other country bills give us a view of the most easterly, westerly, and southerly parts of England. Grannt.

3. Coming from about the south.

I am but mad north, northwest: when the wind is southerly, I know a hawk from a handsaw. Shakspeare.

SOUTHERN. adj. [sudenne, Sax. from
south.]

1. Belonging to the south; meridional.

Frowning Auster seeks the southern sphere,
And rots with endless rain th' unwholesome year. Dryden.

2. Lying toward the south.

Why mourn I not for thee,
And with the southern clouds contend in tears? Shakspeare.

3. Coming from the south.

Men's bodies are heavier when southern winds blow than when northern. Bacon.

SOUTHERNWOOD. n. f. [sudennpudu, Sax. abrotanum, Lat.] A plant that agrees in most parts with the wormwood, from which it is not easy to separate it. Miller.

SOUTHING. adj. [from south.] Going
toward the south.

I will conduct thee on thy way,
When next the southing sun inflames the day. Dryden.

SOUTHING. n. f. Tendency to the south.

Not far from hence, if I observ'd aright
The southing of the stars and polar light, Sicilia lies. Dryden.

SOUTHMOST. adj. [from south.] Furthest
toward the south.

Next Chemos, th' obscene dread of Moab's sons,
From Aroar to Nebo, and the wild
Of southmost Abarim. Milton.

SOUTHSAY. n. f. [properly southsay.]
Prediction.

All those were idle thoughts and fantasies,
Devices, dreams, opinions unsound,
Shews, visions, southsays, and prophecies,
And all that feigned is, as leafings, tales, and lies. Fairy Queen.

To So'UTHSAY. v. n. [See SOOTHSAY.]

To predict.

Young men, hovering between hope and fear, might easily be carried into the superstition of southsaying by names. Camden.

So'UTHSAYER. n. f. [properly southsayer.
See SOOTHSAYER.] A predictor.

So'UTHWARD. adv. [from south.] Toward the south.

A prisoner in a room twenty foot square, is at liberty to walk twenty foot southward, but not northward. Locke.

Every life, from the dreary months,
Flies conscious southward. Thomson.

So'UTHWARD. n. f. The southern regions.
Countries are more fruitful to the southward than in the northern parts. Raleigh.

SOUTHWEST. n. f. [south and west.] Point between the south and west; winter sunset.

Phenice is an haven of Crete, and lieth toward the southwest. Aels.

The planting of trees warm upon a wall against the south or southeast sun, doth hasten their coming on and ripening; and the southeast is found to be better than the southwest, though the southwest be the hotter coast. Bacon.

SO'UVENANCE. n. f. [French.] Remembrance; memory. A French word which, with many more, is now happily disused.

If thou wilt renounce thy miscreance,
Life will I grant thee for thy valiance,
And all thy wrongs will wipe out of my souvenance. Spenser.

Gave wond'rous great countenance to the knight,
That of his way he had no souvenance,
Nor care of vow'd revenge. Spenser.

Sow. n. f. [ruqn, Saxon; soeg, souwe,
Dutch.]

1. A female pig; the female of a boar.

Boars have great fangs, sows much less. Bacon.
A sow beneath an oak shall lie along,
All white herself, and white her thirty young. Dryden.

For which they scorn and hate them worse
Than dogs and cats do sow gelders. Hudibras.
The sow gelder's horn has something musical in it, but this is seldom heard. Spenser.

2. Perhaps from sow might come sowen, swen, swine; ypina, Saxon.
And wast thou fain
To hovel thee with swine, and rogues forlorn,
In short and mudy straw? Shakspeare.

3. An oblong mass of lead. Ainsworth.

4. [millepeda, Lat.] An insect; a millepede. Ainsworth.

So'WEREAD. n. f. [cyclamen, Lat.] A
plant.

To SOW. v. n. [saian, Gothick; sapan, Sax. sayen, Dutch.] To scatter seed in order to a harvest.

The one belongeth unto them that seek, the other unto them that they have found happiness; they that pray do but yet sow, they that give thanks declare they have reaped. Hooker.

They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. Psalms.

He that soweth to his flesh shall reap corruption;
but he that soweth to the spirit, shall reap life everlasting. Galatians.

Sow to yourselves in righteousness, and reap in mercy. Hosea.

To Sow. v. a. part. pass. sown.

1. To scatter in the ground, in order to growth; to propagate by seed.

Like was not to be found,
Save in that soil where all good things did grow,
And freely sprung out of the fruitful ground
As incorrupted nature did them sow, Fairy Queen.
From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd. Shakspeare.

I sow my law in you, and it shall bring fruit in
you. 2 Esdras.

Many plants which grow in the hotter countries, being set in the colder, will, being sown of seeds late in the spring, come up, and abide most part of the summer. Bacon.

When to turn

The fruitful soil, and when to sow the corn,
I sing, Mecrenas. Dryden.

The proud mother views her precious brood,
And happier branches, which she never sow'd. Dryden.

2. To spread; to propagate.

Forwardness is in his heart: he deviseth mischief continually, he soweth discord. Proverbs.
To sow a jangling noise of words unknown. Milton.

Since then they stand secur'd by being join'd,
'Twere worthy a king's head to sow division,
And seeds of jealousy, to loose those bonds. Rowe.
Born to afflict my Marcia's family,
And sow dissension in the hearts of brothers. Addison.

3. To impregnate or stock with seed.

He shall give the rain of thy seed, that thou shalt sow the ground withal. Isaiab.

The intellectual faculty is a goodly field, capable of great improvement; and it is the worst husbandry in the world to sow it with trifles or impertinen-cies. Hale.

4. To besprinkle.

He sow'd with stars the heav'n, thick as a field. Milton.

Morn new sow'd the earth with orient pearl. Milton.

To Sow. v. a. [for sow.] To join by needlework.

Some tree, whose broad smooth leaves together
sow'd,
And girded on, may cover round. Milton.

To SowCE. v. a. To throw into the water.
See SOUSE.

He sowced me up to the middle in the pond. L'Estrange.

So'WER. n. f. [from sow.]

1. He that sprinkles the seed.

A sower went forth to sow. Matthew.
It is thrown round, as grain by a skilful sower. Derham.

2. A scatterer.

Terming Paul and his doctrine a sower of words,
a very babbler or trifler. Hakewill.

3. A breeder; a promoter.

They are sowers of suits, which make the court swell, and the country pine. Bacon.

So'WINS. n. f. Flummery, made of oatmeal somewhat soured.

These sowins, that is, flummery, being blended together, produce good yeast. Mortimer.
See where Norah with the sowins comes. Swift.

To SOWL. v. a. [from sow, as hogs are pulled by dogs, Skinner; from sole, a strap, a rein, Kennet.] To pull by the ears.

He'll go and sowl the porter of Rome gates by the ears. Shakspeare.

SOWN. The participle of sow. It is used barbarously by Swift for sowed.

A goodly country, naturally beautified with roses, sown with pease. Heylin.

An hundred and fifty of their beds, sown together, made up the breadth and length. Gulliver.

So'WTHISTLE. n. f. [sonchius, Latin.] A weed.

Sowthistles though coney eat, yet sheep and cattle will not touch; the milk of which, rubbed on warts, weareth them away, which theweth it is corrosive. Bacon.

SPAAD. n. f. [stella terræ, Lat.] A kind of mineral.

English tale, of which the coarser sort is called plaster; the finer, spaad, earth-flax, or salaman-der's hair. Woodward.

SPACE. n. f. [spatium, Lat.]

1. Room; local extension.

Space is the relation of distance between any two bodies or points. Locke.

Oh undistinguish'd space of woman's wit! Shakespeare.

This which yields or fills all space. Milton.

Pure space is capable neither of resistance nor motion. Locke.

Space and motion can never be actually infinite: they have a power only and a capacity of being increased without end: so that no space can be assigned so vast, but still a larger may be imagined; no motion so swift or languid, but a greater velocity or slowness may still be conceived. Bentley.

2. Any quantity of place.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that 's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich east to boot. Shakespeare.

There was but two ways to escape; the one through the woods, about ten miles space to Walpo. Knolles.

In such a great ruin, where the fragments are great and hard, it is not possible they should be so adjusted in their fall, but that they would lie hollow, and many unfilled spaces would be intercepted amongst them. Burnet.

Measuring first with careful eyes
The space his spear could reach, aloud he cries. Dryden.

3. Quantity of time.

There is a competent time allowed every man;
and, as it is certain death is the conclusion of it, 'tis possible some space before death. Hammond.

Nine times the space that measures day and night
To mortal men, he with his horrid crew
Lay vanquish'd, rolling in the fiery gulph, Confounded, though immortal. Milton.

In a lever the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcrum and the weight. Wilkins.

God may defer his judgments for a time, and give a people a longer space of repentance: he may stay till the iniquities of a nation be full; but sooner or later they have reason to expect his vengeance. Tillotson.

The lives of great men cannot be writ with any tolerable degree of elegance or exactness, within a short space after their decease. Addison.

4. A small time; a while.

Sith for me ye fight, to me this grace
Both yield, to stay your deadly strife a space. Fairy Queen.

Compassion quell'd
His best of man, and gave him up to tears
A space, till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess. Milton.

SPA'CIOUS. adj. [spacieux, Fr. spatiosus, Lat.] Wide; extensive; roomy; not narrow.

The former buildings, which were but mean, contented them not: spacious and ample churches
they erected throughout every city. Hooker.

Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty;
And yet seem cold. Shakespeare.

Merab with spacious beauty fills the sight,
But too much awe chafis'd the bold delight. Cowley.

Like an English gen'ral will I die,
And all the ocean make my spacious grave:
Women and cowards on the land may lie;
The sea 's a tomb that 's proper for the brave. Dryden.

SPA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from spacious.] Extensively.

SPA'CIOUSNESS. n. f. [from spacious.] Roominess; wide extension.

SPA'DDLE. n. f. [diminutive of spade.] A little spade.

Others destroy moles with a spaddle, waiting in the mornings and evenings for them. Mortimer.

SPADE. n. f. [spad, Sax. spade, Islandick and Dutch.]

1. The instrument of digging.

Take the air of the earth new turned up, by digging with the spade, or standing by him that diggeth. Bacon.

Many learned men affirm, that some isthmes have been eat through by the sea, and others cut by the spade. Brown.

His next advance was to the soldier's trade,
Where, if he did not nimbly ply the spade,
His furlly officer ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty cudgel on his tougher back. Dryden.

Here nature never diff'rence made Between the sceptre and the spade. Swift.

2. A deer three years old.

3. A suit at cards.

SPA'DEBONE. n. f. [named from the form.]

The shoulderblade.

By th' shoulder of a ram from off the right side
par'd,
Which usually they boil, the spade-bone being bar'd. Drayton.

SPADI'CEOUS. adj. [spadiceus, Lat.] Of a light red.

Of those five Scaliger beheld, though one was spadiceous, or of a light red, and two inclining to red, yet was there not any of this complexion among them. Brown.

SPADI'LE. n. f. [spadille, or espadille, Fr.] The ace of spades at ombre.

SPAGY'RICK. adj. [spagyricus, Lat. A word coined by Paracelsus from spaber, a searcher, Teutonic.] Chymical.

SPA'GYRIST. n. f. A chymist.

This change is so unexampled, that though among the more curious *spagyrist*s it be very well known, yet many naturalists cannot easily believe it. Boyle.

SPAKE. The old preterit of speak.

So spake the archangel Michael, then paus'd. Milton.

SPALL. n. f. [espaule, Fr.] Shoulder. Out of use.

Their mighty strokes their habergions dismay'd,
And naked made each other's manly spalles. Fairfax.

SPALT or Spelt. n. f. A white, scaly, shining stone, frequently used to promote the fusion of metals. Bailey.

SPAN. n. f. [rpan, rponne, Sax. spanna, Italian; span, Dutch. Perhaps originally the expansion of the hand.]

1. The space from the end of the thumb to the end of the little finger extended; nine inches.

A foot, the length of it, is a sixth part of the fathom; a span, one eighth; a palm, or hand's breadth, one twenty-fourth; a thumb's breadth, or inch, one seventy-second; and a fore-finger's breadth, one ninety-sixth. Holder.

Will you with counters sum
The vast proportion of his infinite,
And buckle in a waste most fathomless,
With spans and inches so diminutive
As fears and reasons? Shakespeare.

Sum how brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage.
That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sum of age. Shakespeare.

When I removed the one, although but at the distance of a span, the other would stand like Hercules's pillar. Brown.

2. Any short duration.

You have scarce time
To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit. Shakespeare.

The virgin's part, the mother, and the wife,
So well she acted in this span of life. Waller.

Then conscience, unrestrain'd by fears, began
To stretch her limits, and extend the span. Dryden.

Life 's but a span, I'll every inch enjoy. Farquhar.

To SPAN. v. a.

1. To measure by the hand extended.

Oft on the well-known spot I fix my eyes,
And span the distance that between us lies. Tickel.

2. To measure.

My surveyor is false; the o'er-great cardinal
Hath shew'd him gold; my life is spann'd already. Shakespeare.

This soul doth span the world, and hang content
From either pole unto the centre;

Where in each room of the well-furnish'd tent
He lies warm, and without adventure. Herbert.

Harry, whose tuneful and well-measur'd song
First taught our English musick how to span Words with just note and accent, not to scan
With Midas' ears, counting short and long. Milton.

SPAN. The preterit of spin.

Together furiously they ran,
That to the ground came horse and man;
The blood out of their helmets span,
So sharp were their encounters. Drayton.

SPAN'NCOUNTER. } n. f. [from span, SPAN'NFARTHING. } counter, and far- thing.] A play at which money is thrown within a span or mark.

Tell the king, that for his father's sake, Henry in whose time boys went to spancounter for French crowns, I am content he shall reign. Shakespeare.

Boys shall not play
At spancounter or blowpoint, but shall pay Toll to some courtier. Donne.

His chief solace is to steal down, and play at spanfartning with the page. Swift.

To SPANE. v. a. To wean a child.

SPANG. n. f. [spange, Dut.] This word seems to have signified a cluster of shining bodies.

The colours that shew best by candlelight are white, carnation, and a kind of sea-water green;
and ouches or spangs, as they are of no great cost,
so they are of most glory. Bacon.

SPA'NGLE. n. f. [spange, German, a buckle, a locket; whence ober spangen, ear-rings.]

1. A small plate or boss of shining metal.

2. Any thing sparkling and shining.
As hoary frost with spangles doth attire
The mossy branches of an oak half dead. Fairy Queen.

Thus in a starry night fond children cry
For the rich spangles that adorn the sky. Waller.

The twinkling spangles, the ornaments of the upper world, lose their beauty and magnificence:
vulgar spectators see them but as a confused huddle of petty illuminants. Glanville.

That now the dew with spangles deck'd the
ground,
A sweeter spot of earth was never found. Dryden.

To SPA'NGLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To besprinkle with spangles or shining bodies.

They never meet in grove or green,
By fountain clear, or spangled starlight shewn. Shakespeare.

What stars do spangle heaven with such beauty,
As those two eyes become that heavenly face. Shakespeare.

Unpin that spangled breastplate which you wear,
That th' eyes of busy fools may be stopt there. Donne.

Four faces each
Had, like a double Janus; all their shape Spangled with eyes, more numerous than those Of Argus. Milton.

Then appear'd
Spangling the hemisphere, then first adorn'd
With the bright luminaries, that set and rose. Milton.

He cuts out a silk mantle from the skies,
Where the most sprightly azure pleas'd the eyes;
This he with starry vapours spangles all,
Took in their prime, ere they grow, rise, and fall. Cowley.

The spacious firmament on high,
With all the blue etherial sky,
And spangled heav'ns, a shining frame,
Their great Original proclaim. Spectator.

Advances full on the pretended spear. Thomson.

2. A lance, generally with prongs, to kill fish.

The borderers watching, until they be past up into some narrow creek, below them cast a strong corded net athwart the stream, with which, and their loud shouting, they stop them from retiring, until the ebb have abandoned them to the hunters mercy, who,
by an old custom, share them with such indifference, as, if a woman with child be present, the babe in her womb is gratified with a portion: a point also observed by the spear hunters in taking of salmons.
Carew.

To SPEAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To kill or pierce with a spear.

To SPEAR. v. a. To shoot or sprout. This is commonly written spire.

Let them not lie lest they should spear, and the air dry and spoil the shoot. Mortimer.

SPEAR GRASS. n. s. [spear and grafs.]

Long stiff grafs.

Tickle our noses with speargrafs to make them bleed; and then beslobber our garments with it.
Shaksp.

SPEA'RMAN. n. s. [spear and man.] One who uses a lance in fight.

The spearman's arm, by thee, great God, directed,
Sends forth a certain wound. Prior.

SPE'CIAL. adj. [special, Fr. specialis, Lat.]

1. Noting a fort or species.

A special idea is called by the schools a species.
Watts.

2. Particular; peculiar.

Most commonly with a certain special grace of her own, wagging her lips, and grinning instead of smiling. Sidney.

The several books of scripture, having had each some several occasion and particular purpose which caused them to be written, the contents thereof are according to the exigence of that special end whereunto they are intended. Hooker.

Of all men alive,
I never yet beheld that special face,

Which I could fancy more than any other. Shaksp.

Nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give.
Shaksp.

The fourth commandment, in respect of any one definite and special day of every week, was not simply and perpetually moral. White.

Our Saviour is represented every where in scripture as the special patron of the poor and the afflicted, and as laying their interest to heart more nearly than those of any other of his members. Atterbury.

3. Appropriate; designed for a particular purpose.

O'Neal, upon his marriage with a daughter of Kildare, was made denizen by a special act of parliament. Davies.

Such things are evident by natural light, which men of a mature age, in the ordinary use of their faculties, with the common help of mutual society, may know and be sufficiently assured of without the help of any special revelation. Wilkins.

4. Extraordinary; uncommon.

That which necessity of some special time doth cause to be enjoined, bindeth no longer than during that time, but doth afterward become free. Hooker.

 The other scheme takes special care to attribute all the work of conversion to grace. Hammond.
 Though our charity should be universal, yet as it cannot be actually exercised but on particular times, so it should be chiefly on special opportunities. Spratt.

He bore

A paunch of the same bulk before;
 Which still he had a special care
 To keep well cramm'd with thrifty fare. Hudibras.

5. Chief in excellence.

The king hath drawn
 The special head of all the land together. Shaksp.
SPECIALLY. adv. [from special.]

Specially the day that thou stoodest before the Lord,
 A brother beloved, specially to me. Phil.

2. Not in a common way; peculiarly.

If there be matter of law that carries any difficulty, the jury may, to deliver themselves from an ataint, find it specially. Hale.

SPECIALTY. n. s. [specialité, Fr. from SPECIALITY.] special. Particularity.

On these two general heads all other specialities are dependent. Hooker.

The packet is not come

Where that and other specialities are bound. Shaksp.
Speciality of rule hath been neglected. Shaksp.

When men were sure, that, in case they rested upon a bare contract without speciality, the other party might wage his law, they would not rest upon such contracts without reducing the debt into a speciality, which accorded many suits. Hale.

SPECIES. n. s. [species, Latin.]

1. A sort; a subdivision of a general term.

A special idea is called by the schools a species; it is one common nature that agrees to several singular individual beings: so horse is a special idea or species, as it agrees to Bucephalus, Trot and Snowball. Watts.

2. Class of nature; single order of beings.

He intendeth the care of species or common natures, but letteth loose the guard of individuals or single existencies. Brown.

The Phenix Pindar is a whole species alone. Cowley.

For we are animals no less,
 Although of different species. Hudibras.

Thou nam'st a race that must proceed from me,
 Yet my whole species in myself I see. Dryden.

A mind of superior or meaner capacities than human, would constitute a different species, though united to a human body in the same laws of connexion: and a mind of human capacities would make another species, if united to a different body in different laws of connexion. Bentley.

3. Appearance to the senses; any visible or sensible representation.

An apparent diversity between the species visible and audible is, that the visible doth not mingle in the medium, but the audible doth. Bacon.

It is a most certain rule, how much any body hath of colour, so much hath it of opacity, and by so much the more unfit it is to transmit the species. Ray.

The species of the letters illuminated with blue, were nearer to the lens than those illuminated with deep red, by about three inches, or three and a quarter; but the species of the letters illuminated with indigo and violet appeared so confused and indistinct, that I could not read them. Newton.

4. Representation to the mind.

Wit in the poet, or wit-writing, is no other than the faculty of imagination in the writer, which searches over all the memory for the species or ideas of those things which it designs to represent. Dryden.

5. Show; visible exhibition. Not in use; and perhaps, in the following quotation, misprinted for spectacles.

Shews and species serve best with the people. Bacon.

6. Circulating money.

As there was in the splendour of the Roman empire a less quantity of current species in Europe than there is now, Rome possessed a much greater proportion of the circulating species of its time than any European city. Arbutnot.

7. Simples that have place in a compound medicine.

SPECIFIC. adj. [specifique, Fr. species SPECIFIC.] and facio, Lat.]

1. That makes a thing of the species of which it is.

That thou to truth the perfect way may'st know,
 To thee all her specific forms I'll show. Denham.

The understanding, as to the exercise of this power, is subject to the command of the will, though, as to the specific nature of its acts, it is determined by the object. South.

By whose direction is the nutriment so regularly distributed into the respective parts, and how are they kept to their specific uniformities? Glanville.

These principles I consider not as occult qualities, supposed to result from the specific forms of things, but as general laws of nature, by which the things themselves are formed; their truth appearing to us by phenomena, though their causes be not yet discovered. Newton.

As all things were formed according to these specific platforms, so their truth must be measured from their conformity to them. Norris.

Specific gravity is the appropriate and peculiar gravity or weight which any species of natural bodies have, and by which they are plainly distinguishable from all other bodies of different kinds. Quincy.

The specific qualities of plants reside in their native spirit, oil, and essential salt: for the water, fixt salt, and earth, appear to be the same in all plants. Arbutnot.

Specific difference is that primary attribute which distinguishes each species from one another, while they stand ranked under the same general nature or genus. Though wine differs from other liquors, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit, yet this is but a general or generic difference; for it does not distinguish wine from cyder or perry: the specific difference of wine therefore is its pressure from the grape; as cyder is pressed from apples, and perry from pears. Watts.

2. [In medicine.] Appropriated to the cure of some particular distemper. It is usually applied to the arcana, or medicines that work by occult qualities.

The operation of purging medicines has been referred to a hidden propriety, a specific virtue, and the like shifts of ignorance. Bacon.

If he would drink a good decoction of farsa, with the usual specifics, she might enjoy a good health. Wifeman.

SPECIFICALLY. adv. [from specific.]

In such a manner as to constitute a species; according to the nature of the species.

His faith must be not only living, but lively too; it must be put into a posture by a particular exercise of those several virtues that are specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty. South.

Human reason doth not only gradually, but specifically, differ from the fantastick reason of brutes, which have no conceit of truth, as an aggregate of divers simple conceits, nor of any other universal. Grew.

He must allow that bodies were endowed with the same affections then as ever since; and that, if an axe head be supposed to float upon water, which is specifically lighter, it had been supernatural. Bentley.

TO SPECIFY. v. a. [from species and facio, Lat.] To mark by notation of distinguishing particularities.

Man, by the instituted law of his creation, and the common influence of the divine goodness, is enabled to act as a reasonable creature, without any particular, specifying, concurrent, new imperate act of the divine special providence. Hale.

SPECIFICATION. n. s. [from specific; specification, Fr.]

1. Distinct notation; determination by a peculiar mark.

This specification or limitation of the question, hinders the disputers from wandering away from the precise point of enquiry. Watts.

2. Particular mention.

The constitution here speaks generally, without the specification of any place. Ayliffe.

TO SPECIFY. v. a. [from species; specifier, French.] To mention; to show by some particular mark of distinction.

As the change of such laws as have been specified is necessary, so the evidence that they are such must be great. Hooker.

St. Peter doth not specify what these waters were. Burnet.

He has there given us an exact geography of Greece, where the countries, and the uses of their soils, are specified. Pope.

SPECIMEN. n. s. [specimen, Latin.] A sample; a part of any thing exhibited, that the rest may be known.

Several persons have exhibited specimens of this art before multitudes of beholders. Speiater.

SPECIOUS. adj. [specieux, Fr. speciosus, Latin.]

1. Showy; pleasing to the view.

The rest, far greater part,
 Will deem in outward rites and specious forms Religion satisfied. Milton.

She next I took to wife,
 O that I never had! fond wish too late!
 Was in the vale of Sorec, Dalila,
 That specious monster, my accomplish'd snare. Milton.

2. Plausible; superficially, not solidly right; striking at first view.

Bad men boast
 Their specious deeds on earth which glory excites,
 Or close ambition varnish'd o'er with zeal. Milton.

Somewhat of specious they must have to recommend themselves to princes; for folly will not easily go down in its natural form. Dryden.

Temptation is of greater danger, because it is covered with the specious names of good nature and good manners. Regent.

This is the only specious objection which our Romish adversaries urge against the doctrine of this church in the point of celibacy. Atterbury.

SPECIOUSLY. adv. [from specious.] With fair appearance.

Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity; especially to that personated devotion under which any kind of impiety is wont to be disguised, and put off more speciously. Hammond.

SPECK. n. s. [specc, Saxon.] A small discoloration; a spot.

Every speck does not blind a man. Government of the Tongue.

Then are they happy, when
 No speck is left of their habitual stains;
 But the pure æther of the soul remains. Dryden.

TO SPECK. v. a. To spot; to stain in drops.

Flow'r

SPECKLE. n. s. [from speck.] Small speck; little spot.

TO SPECKLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with small spots.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
 Forelusting up aloft his speckled breast,
 And often bounding on the bruised grass,
 As for great joy of his new comen guest. F. Queen.

Speckled vanity
 Will sicken soon and die,
 And leprous sin will melt from earthly mould. Milton.

Saw'st thou not late a speckled serpent rear
 His gilded spires to climb on yon fair tree?
 Before this happy minute I was he. Dryden.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
 The crested basilisk and speckled snake;
 Pleas'd the green lustre of the scales survey,
 And with their forked tongue and pointless sting shall play. Pope.

The tortoise here and elephant unite,
Transform'd to combs, the speckled and the white.

Pope.

SPECKT or Speight. n. s. A woodpecker.

Ainsworth.

SPE'CTACLE. n. s. [spectacle, Fr. spectaculum, Latin.]

1. A show; a gazing stock; any thing exhibited to the view as eminently remarkable.

Such spectacles, though they are just, are sad.

Denham.

3. [In the plural.] Glasses to assist the sight.

The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side.

Shakspeare.

We have helps, for sight above spectacles and glasses.

Bacon.

Shakspeare was naturally learned: he needed not the spectacles of books to read nature; he looked inwards and found her there.

Dryden.

The first spectacle-maker did not think that he was leading the way to the discovery of new planets.

Grew.

This is the reason of the decay of sight in old men, and shews why their sight is mended by spectacles.

Newton.

This day then let us not be told,
That you are sick, and I grown old;
Nor think on our approaching ills,
And talk of spectacles and pills.

Swift.

SPE'CTACLED. adj. [from the noun.] Furnished with spectacles.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights
Are spectacled to see him.

Shakspeare.

1. Having the qualities of a mirror or looking-glass.

It were but madness now t' impart
The skill of specular stone.

Donne.

Quicksilver may, by the fire alone, in glass vessels, be turned into a red body; and from this red body may be obtained a mercury, bright and specular as before.

Boyle.

A speculum of metal without glass, made some years since for optical uses, and very well wrought, produced none of those rings; and thence I understood that these rings arise not from the specular surface alone, but depend upon the two surfaces of the plate of glass whereof the speculum was made, and upon the thickness of the glass between them.

Newton.

2. Assisting sight. Improper.

The hidden way
Of nature wouldst thou know, how first she frames
All things in miniature, thy specular orb
Apply to well-dissected kernels; lo!
In each observe the slender threads
Of first-beginning trees.

Philips.

TO SPE'CLATE. v. n. [speculer, French; specular, Latin.] To meditate; to contemplate; to take a view of any thing with the mind.

Zophiel, of cherubim the swiftest wing, Came flying. Milton.

Let it be enough what thou hast done, When spotted deaths ran arm'd through ev'ry street, With poison'd darts, which not the good could shun,

The speedy could outfly, or valiant meet. Dryden.

SPEIGHT. n. f. [picus martius, Latin.] A bird.

SPELL. n. f. [spel, Saxon, a word.]

1. A charm consisting of some words of occult power. Thus Horace uses words : Sunt verba & voces quibus hunc lenire dolorem

Possis.

Start not ; her actions shall be holy :

You hear my spell is lawful : do not shun her,

Until you see her die again ; for then

You kill her double. Shakspeare.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, that they stand in awe of charms, spells, and conjurations, letters, characters, notes, and dashes. Brown.

Thou durst not thus disparage glorious arms,

Had not spells

And black enchantments, some magician's art,

Arm'd thee or charm'd thee strong. Milton.

Begin, begin ; the mystick spell prepare. Milton.

Yourselves you so excel,

When you vouchsafe to breathe my thought,

That, like a spirit, with this spell

Of my own teaching I am caught. Waller.

Mild Lucina

Then reach'd her midwife hands to speed the throes, And spoke the pow'rful spells that babes to birth disclose. Dryden.

2. A turn of work ; a vicissitude of labour, A low word.

Their toil is so extreme as they cannot endure it above four hours in a day, but are succeeded by spells : the residue of the time they wear out at coytes and kayles. Carew.

To SPELL. v. a. pret. and part. pass. spelled or spelt. [spellen, Dutch.]

1. To write with the proper letters.

In the criticism of spelling, the word satire ought to be with i, and not with y ; and if this be so, then it is false spelled throughout. Dryden.

2. To read by naming letters singly.

I never yet saw man,

How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featur'd,

But she would spell him backward ; if fair fac'd,

She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister. Shakspeare.

3. To charm.

I have you fast :

Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,

And try if they can gain your liberty. Shakspeare.

This, gather'd in the planetary hour,

With noxious weeds, and spell'd with words of pow'r,

Dire stepdames in the magic bowl infuse. Dryden.

To SPELL. v. n.

1. To form words of letters

What small knowledge was, in them did dwell ;

And he a god, who could but read or spell. Dryden.

By passing on the vowels and consonants on the sides of four dice, he has made this a play for his children, whereby his eldest son in coats has played himself into spelling. Locke.

The Latin being written of the same character with the mother tongue, by the assistance of a spelling book it is legible. Spektor.

Another cause, which hath maimed our language, is a foolish opinion that we ought to spell exactly as we speak. Swift.

2. To read.

If I read aught in heaven,

Or heav'n write aught of late, by what the stars,

Voluminous or single characters,

In their conjunction met, give me to spell,

Sorrows and labours, opposition, hate,

Attend thee. Milton.

When gowns, not arms, repell'd

The fierce Epirote, and the African bold,

Whether to settle peace, or to unfold

The drift of hollow states, hard to be spell'd. Milton.

And may at last my weary age

Find out the peaceful hermitage,

Where I may sit and rightly spell

Of every star that heav'n doth shew,

And every herb that tips the dew. Milton.

3. To read unskilfully.

As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notion ; a rude unwritten blank, sent into the world only to read and spell out a God in the works of creation. South.

To SPELT. v. n. To split; to break. A bad word.

Feed geese with oats, spelted beans, barley meal, or ground malt mixed with beer. Mortimer.

SPELTER. n. s. A kind of femimetal.

Metals in fusion do not flame, for want of a copious fume; except spelter, which fumes copiously, and thereby flames. Newton.

To SPEND. v. a. [spendan, Saxon; spendere, Italian.]

1. To consume; to exhaust; to waste.

Our cannons malice vainly shall be spent Against th' invulnerable clouds. Shakspeare.
I will very gladly spend and be spent for you. 2 Corinthians.

There is oil in the dwelling of the wife, but a foolish man spendeth it up. Proverbs.

We must exasperate

The almighty Victor to spend all his rage. Milton.
Money is brought into England by nothing but spending here less of foreign commodities than what we carry to market can pay for. Locke.

2. To bestow, as expence; to expend, as cost.

Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? Isaiah.

3. To bestow for any purpose: often with upon.

When we can intreat an hour to serve, Would spend it in some words upon that business, If you would grant the time. Shakspeare.

Eleutherius, perceiving that he was unwilling to spend any more time upon the debate, thought not fit to make any mention to him of the proposed opinion. Boyle.

4. To effuse.

Coward dogs

Most spend their mouths, when what they seem to threaten Runs far before them. Shakspeare.

5. To squander; to lavish.

The whole of our reflections terminate in this, what course we are to take to pass our time; some to get, and others to spend, their estates. Wake.

6. To pass; to suffer to pass away.

In those pastoral pastimes a great many days were spent, to follow their flying predecessors. Sidney.

They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave. Job.

He spends his life with his wife, and remembereth neither father nor mother. Esdra.

Say, for you saw us, ye immortal lights! How oft unwearied have we spent the nights, Till the Lætan stars, so fam'd for love, Wonder'd at us from above. Cowley.

When he was of riper years, for his farther accomplishment, he spent a considerable part of his time in travelling. Pope.

7. To waste; to wear out; to exhaust of force.

The waves ascended and descended, till their violence being spent by degrees, they settled at last. Burnet.

They bend their bows, they whirl their sling around, Heaps of spent arrows fall, and strew the ground. Dryden.

The winds are rais'd, the storm blows high; Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up In its full fury, and direct it right, Till it has spent itself on Cato's head. Addison.

8. To fatigue; to harass.

Nothing but only the hope of spoil did relieve them, having scarce clothes to cover their nakedness, and their bodies spent with long labour and thirst. Knolles.

Or come your shipping in our ports to lay, Spent and disabled in so long a way? Dryden.
Our walls are thinly mann'd, our best men slain; The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching, And harass'd out with duty. Dryden.

Some spent with toil, some with despair oppress'd, Leap'd headlong from the heights; the flames consumed the rest. Dryden.

VOL. II.

Thou oft hast seen me

Wrestling with vice and faction; now thou see'st me Spent, overpower'd, despairing of success. Addison.

To SPEND. v. n.

1. To make expence.

Henceforth your tongue must spend at lesser rate, Than in its flames to wrap a nation's fate. Dryden.
He spends as a person who knows that he must come to a reckoning. South.

2. To prove in the use.

Butter spent as if it came from the richer soil. Temple.

3. To be lost or wasted.

The sound spendeth, and is dissipated in the open air; but in such concaves it is conserved and contracted. Bacon.

On mountains, it may be, many dews fall, that spend before they come to the valleys. Bacon.

4. To be employed to any use.

There have been cups and an image of Jupiter made of wild vines; for the vines that they use for wine are so often cut, that their sap spendeth into the grapes. Bacon.

SPENDER. n. s. [from spend.]

1. One who spends.

Let not your recreations be lavish spenders of your time; but healthful, short, and apt to refresh you. Taylor.

2. A prodigal; a lavisher.

Bishop Morton told the commissioners, who were to levy the benevolence, if they met with any that were sparing, to tell them that they must needs have, because they laid up; and if they were spenders, they must needs have, because it was seen in their port and manner of living. Bacon.

SPENDTHRIFT. n. s. [spend and thrift.]

A prodigal; a lavisher.

Bitter cold weather starved both the bird and the spendthrift. L'Estrange.

Some fawning usurer does feed With present sums th' unwary spendthrift's need. Dryden.

Most men, like spendthrift heirs, judge a little in hand better than a great deal to come. Locke.

The son, bred in sloth, becomes a spendthrift, a profligate, and goes out of the world a beggar. Swift.

SPE'ABLE. adj. [sperabilis, Lat.] Such as may be hoped. Not in use.

We may cast it away, if it be found but a bladder, and discharge it of so much as is vain and not sperable. Bacon.

SPERM. n. s. [Sperme, Fr. sperma, Lat.]

Seed; that by which the species is continued.

Some creatures bring forth many young ones at a burthen, and some but one: this may be caused by the quantity of sperm required, or by the partitions of the womb which may sever the sperm. Bacon.

There is required to the preparation of the sperm of animals a great apparatus of vessels, many secretions, concoctions, reflections, and circulations. Ray.

SPERMACE'TI. n. s. [Lat.] Corruptedly pronounced parmafitty.

A particular sort of whale affords the oil whence this is made; and that is very improperly called sperma, because it is only the oil which comes from the head of which it can be made. It is changed from what it is naturally, the oil itself being very brown and rank. The peculiar property of it is, to shoot into flakes, not much unlike the chrySTALLIZATION of salts; but in this state 'tis yellow, and has a certain rankness, from which it is freed by squeezing it between warm metalline plates; at length it becomes perfectly pure, inodorous, flaky, smooth, white, and in some measure transparent. Quincy.

SPERMA'TICAL. } adj. [spermatique, Fr.]
SPERMA'TICK. } from sperm.]

1. Seminal; consisting of seed.

The primordials of the world are not mechanical, but spermatical or vital. More.

Metals and sundry meteors rude shapes have no need of any particular principle of life, or spermatical form, distinct from the rest or motion of the particles of the matter. More.

2. Belonging to the sperm; containing sperm.

The moisture of the body, which did before irrigate the parts, is drawn down to the spermatical vessels. Bacon.

Two different sexes must concur to their generation: there is in both a great apparatus of spermatick vessels, wherein the more spirituous part of the blood is by many digestions and circulations exalted into sperm. Ray.

To SPE'RMATIZE. v. n. [from sperm.] To yield feed.

Aristotle affirming that women do not spermatize, and confer a receptacle, rather than essential principles of generation, deductively includes both sexes in mankind. Brown.

SPERMATOCE'LE. n. s. [σπέρμα and κύλη.] A rupture caused by the contraction of the seminal vessels, and the semen falling into the scrotum. Bailey.

SPERMO'LOGIST. n. s. [σπερμολόγος.]

One who gathers or treats of seeds. DiA.

To SPERSE. v. a. [sperfus, Lat.] To disperse; to scatter. Not in use.

The wrathful wind, Which blows cold storms, burst out of Scythian mew That sperst those clouds, and in so short as thought This dreadful shape was vanished to nought. Spenser.

He making speedy way through spersted air, And through the world of waters wide and deep, To Morpheus' house doth hastily repair. Fairy Qu.

To SPET. v. a. [spet in Scotland is a superabundance of water: as, that tide or fresh was a high spet.] To bring or pour abundantly.

Mysterious dame, That ne'er art call'd but when the dragon womb Of Stygian darkness spets her thickest gloom, And makes one blot of all the air, Stop thy cloudy ebony chair. Milton.

To SPEW. v. a. [spepan, Sax. speuwen, Dutch.]

1. To vomit; to eject from the stomach.

A swordfish snail him from the rest did sunder, That in his throat him pricking softly under His wide abyss, him forced forth to spew, That all the sea did roar like heaven's thunder, And all the waves were stain'd with filthy hue. Spenser.

2. To eject; to cast forth.

When earth with slime and mud is cover'd o'er, Or hollow places spew their wat'ry store. Dryden.
When yellow sands are sifted from below, The glittering billows give a golden show; And when the fouler bottom spews the black, The Stygian dye the tainted waters take. Dryden.

3. To eject with loathing.

Keep my statutes, and commit not any of these abominations, that the land spew not you out. Leviticus.

Contentious suits ought to be spewed out, as the surfeit of courts. Bacon.

To SPEW. v. n. To vomit; to ease the stomach.

He could have haul'd in The drunkards, and the noises of the inn: But better 'twas that they should sleep or spew, Than in the scene to offend or him or you. Jonson.

SPE'WY. adj. [from spew.] Wet; foggy. A provincial word.

The lower vallies in wet winters are so spewy, that they know not how to feed them. Mortimer.

To SPHA'CELATE. v. a. [from sphacelus, medical Latin.] To affect with a gangrene.

The long retention of matter sphacelates the brain. Sharp.

To SPHA'CELATE. v. n. To mortify; to suffer the gangrene.

The skin, by the great distention, having been rendered very thin, will, if not taken away, sphacellate, and the rest degenerate into a cancerous ulcer. Sharp.

SPH

SPHA'CELUS. n. f. [σφακελ]; sphacele, Fr.] A gangrene; a mortification.
It is the ground of inflammation, gangrene, sphacelus. Wiseman.

SPHERE. n. f. [sphere, Fr. sphæra, Lat.]

1. A globe; an orbicular body; a body of which the centre is at the same distance from every point of the circumference.
First the sun, a mighty sphere, he fram'd. Milton.
2. Any globe of the mundane system.
What if within the moon's fair shining sphere,
What if in every other star unseen,
Of other worlds he happily should hear? Fairy Qu.
And then mortal ears
Had heard the musick of the spheres. Dryden.
3. A globe representing the earth or sky.
Two figures on the sides emboss'd appear;
Conon, and what's his name who made the sphere,
And shew'd the seasons of the sliding year? Dryden.
4. Orb; circuit of motion.
Half unsung, but narrower bound
Within the visible diurnal sphere. Milton.
5. [from the sphere of activity ascribed to the power emanating from bodies.] Province; compass of knowledge or action; employment.
To be call'd into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in't. Shakspeare.
Of enemies he could not but contract good store, while moving in so high a sphere, and with so vigorous a lustre. King Charles.
Every man, versed in any particular business, finds fault with these authors, so far as they treat of matters within his sphere. Addison.
Ye know the spheres and various tasks assign'd
By laws eternal to th' ætherial kind. Pope.
The hermit's pray'r permitted, not approv'd;
Soon in an higher sphere Eulogius mov'd. Harte.

TO SPHERE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place in a sphere.
The glorious planet Sol,
In noble eminence enthron'd and spher'd
Amidst the rest, whose medicinal eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil. Shakspeare.
2. To form into roundness.
Light from her native east
To journey through the airy gloom began,
Spher'd in a radiant cloud; for yet the sun
Was not. Milton.

SPHERICAL. adj. [sphérique, Fr. from SPHERICK. sphere.]

1. Round; orbicular; globular.
What descent of waters could there be in a spherical and round body, wherein there is nor high nor low? Raleigh.
Though sounds spread round, so that there is an orb or spherical area of the sound, yet they go farthest in the forelines from the first local impulsion of the air. Bacon.
By discernment of the moisture drawn up in vapours, we must know the reason of the spherical figures of the drops. Glanville.
A fluid mass necessarily falls into a spherical surface. Keil.
Where the central nodule was globular, the inner surface of the first crust would be spherick; and if the crust was in all parts of the same thickness, that whole crust would be spherical. Woodward.
2. Planetary; relating to the orbs of the planets.
We make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains by spherical predominance. Shakspeare.

SPHERICALLY. adv. [from spherical.] In form of a sphere.

SPHERICALNESS. n. f. [from sphere.]

SPHERICITY. n. f. Roundness; rotundity; globosity.
Such bodies receive their figure and limits from such lets as hinder them from attaining to that sphero- icalness they aim at. Digby.
Water consists of small, smooth, spherical particles: their smoothness makes 'em slip easily upon

SPI

one another: the sphericity keeps 'em from touching one another in more points than one. Cheyne.

SPHEROID. n. f. [σφαῖρον and εἶδος; spheroides, Fr.] A body oblong or oblate, approaching to the form of a sphere.
They are not solid particles, by the necessity they are under to change their figures into oblong sphero- ids, in the capillary vessels. Cheyne.

SPHEROIDICAL. adj. [from spheroid.]
Having the form of a spheroid.
If these corpuscles be spheroidical, or oval, their shortest diameters must not be much greater than those of light. Cheyne.

SPHERULE. n. f. [sphærule, Lat.] A little globe.
Mercury is a collection of exceeding small, vastly heavy spherules. Cheyne.

SPHINX. n. f. [σφιγξ.] A famous monster in Egypt, that remained by conjoined Nilus, having the face of a virgin, and the body of a lion. Peacham.

SPIAL. n. f. [espial, Fr.] A spy; a scout;
a watcher. Obsolete.
His ears be as spials, alarm to crye. Tusser.
He privy spials plac'd in all his way,
To weet what course he takes, and how he fares. Spenser.
For he by faithful spial was assur'd
That Egypt's king was forward on his way. Fairfax.
Their trust towards them hath rather been as to good spials and good whisperers, than good magistrates and officers. Bacon.

SPICE. n. f. [espices, French.]

1. A vegetable production, fragrant to the smell and pungent to the palate; an aromatick substance used in fauces.
Dang'rous rocks,
Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all the spices on the stream. Shakspeare.
Is not manhood, learning, gentleness, and virtue,
the spice and salt that seasons a man? Shakspeare.
Garlick, the northern spice, is in mighty request among the Indians. Temple.
High fauces and rich spices are fetched from the Indies. Baker.
2. A small quantity, as of spice to the thing seasoned.
Think what they have done,
And then run stark mad; for all Thy by-gone fooleries were but spices of it. Shakspeare.
It containeth singular relations, not without some spice or sprinkling of all learning. Brown.
So in the wicked there's no vice,
Of which the saints have not a spice. Hudibras.

TO SPICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To season with spice; to mix with aromatick
bodies.
His mother was a vot'ress of my order,
And in the spiced Indian air by night
Full often she hath gossip'd by my side. Shakspeare.
With a festivall
She'll first receive thee; but will spice thy bread
With flowrie poysons. Chapman.
These hymns may work on future wits, and so
May great-grandchildren of thy praises grow;
And so, though not revive, embalm and spice
The world, which else would putrify with vice. Donne.
What though some have a fraught
Of cloves and nutmegs, and in cinnamon sail,
If thou hast wherewithal to spice a draught,
When griefs prevail? Herbert.

SPI'CKER. n. f. [from spice.] One who deals in spice.
Names have been derived from occupations as Salter and Spicer. Camden.

SPI'CERY. n. f. [espicerie, Fr. from spice.]

1. The commodity of spices.
Their camels were laden with spicery, and balm and myrrh. Raleigh.
She in whose body
The western treasure, eastern spicery,
Europe and Africk, and the unknown rest,
Were easily found. Donne.

SP I

2. A repository of spices.
The spicery, the cellar and its furniture, are too well known to be here insisted upon. Addison.

SPICK and SPAN. [This word I should not have expected to have found authorized by a polite writer. Span-new is used by Chaucer, and is supposed to come from spannan, to stretch, Saxon; expandere, Latin; whence span. Span-new is therefore originally used of cloth newly extended or dressed at the clothiers, and spick and span is newly extended on the spikes or tenters: it is however a low word.] Quite new; now first used.
While the honour thou hast got
Is spick and span new, piping hot,
Strike her up bravely. Butler.
They would have these reduced to nothing, and then others created spick and span new out of nothing. Burnett.
I keep no antiquated stuff;
But spick and span I have enough. Swift.

SPI'CKNEL or Spignel. n. f. [meum, Lat.]
The herb maldmony or bearwort. Diæ.

SPICO'SITY. n. f. [spica, Lat.] The quality of being spiked like ears of corn;
fulness of ears. Diæ.

SPI'CY. adj. [from spice.]

1. Producing spice; abounding with aromaticks.
Off at sea north-east winds blow
Sabæan odour, from the spicy shore
Of Araby the blest; with such delay
Well pleas'd they slack their course; and many a league,
Cheer'd with the grateful smell, old ocean smiles. Milton.
For them the Idumæan balm did sweat,
And in hot Ceilon spicy forests grew. Dryden.
2. Aromatick; having the qualities of spice.
The regimen in this disease ought to be of spicy and cephalick vegetables, to dispel the viscosity. Arbutnot.
Under southern skies exalt their sails,
Led by new stars, and borne by spicy gales! Pope.

SPIDER. n. f. [Skinner thinks this word softened from spinder, or spinner, from spin: Junius, with his usual felicity, dreams that it comes from σπίζω, to extend; for the spider extends his web.
Perhaps it comes from spieden, Dutch, speyden, Danish, to spy, to lie upon the catch. Dop, dona, Saxon, is a beetle, or properly a humble bee, or stingless bee.
May not spider be spy dor, the insect that watches the dor?] The animal that spins a web for flies.
More direful hap betide that hated wretch,
That I can wish to adders, spiders, toads. Shakspeare.
The spider's web to watch we'll stand,
And, when it takes the bee,
We'll help out of the tyrant's hand
The innocent to free. Drayton.
Insidious, restless, watchful spider,
Fear no officious damsel's broom;
Extend thy artful fabrick wider,
And spread thy banners round my room:
While I thy curious fabrick stare at,
And think on hapless poet's fate,
Like thee confin'd to noisome garret,
And rudely banish'd rooms of state. Dr. Littleton.
The spider's touch how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line. Pope.

SPI'DERCATCHER. n. f. [from spider and catcher; picus murarius, Lat.] A bird.

SPI'DERWORT. n. f. [sphalangium, Latin.]
A plant with a lily-flower, composed of six petals. Miller.

SPI'GOT. n. f. [spijker, Dut.] A pin or peg put into the faucet to keep in the liquor.

Base Hungarian wight, wilt thou the spigot wield?
Shakspeare.

Take out the spigot, and clap the point in your mouth.
Swift.

SPIKE. n. f. [spica, Latin.]

1. An ear of corn.

Drawn up in ranks and files, the bearded spikes
Guard it from birds, as with a stand of pikes.
Denham.

Suffering not the yellow beards to rear,
He tramples down the spikes, and intercepts the year.
Dryden.

The gleaners,
Spike after spike, their sparing harvest, pick.
Thomson.

2. A long nail of iron or wood; a long rod of iron sharpened: so called from its similitude to an ear of corn.

For the body of the ships, no nation equals England for the oaken timber; and we need not borrow of any other iron for spikes, or nails to fasten them.
Bacon.

The head of your medal would be seen to more advantage, if it were placed on a spike of the tower.
Dryden.

He wears on his heads the corona radiata, another type of his divinity: the spikes that shoot out represent the rays of the sun.
Addison.

SPIKE. n. f. A smaller species of lavender.

The oil of spike is much used by our artificers in their varnishes; but it is generally adulterated.
Hill.

To SPIKE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with long nails.

Lay long planks upon them, pinned or spiked down to the pieces of oak on which they lie.
Moxon.

Lay long planks upon them, spiking or pinning them down fast.
Mortimer.

2. To set with spikes.

A youth, leaping over the spiked pales, was suddenly frightened down, and in his falling he was caught by those spikes.
Wise man.

3. To make sharp at the end.

SPIKENARD. n. f. [spica nardi, Lat.] A plant; and the oil or balsam produced from the plant.

It grows plentifully in Java. It has been known to the medical writers of all ages.
Hill.

A woman, having an alabastrer box of ointment of spikenard, brake and poured it on his head.
Mark.

He cast into the pile bundles of myrrh, and sheaves of spikenard, enriching it with every spicy shrub.
Spectator.

SPILL. n. f. [spijlen, Dutch.]

1. A small shiver of wood, or thin bar of iron.

The oysters, besides gathering by hand, have a peculiar dredge, which is a thick strong net, fastened to three spills of iron, and drawn at the boat's stern.
Carew.

Have near the bunghole a little venthole, stopped with a spill.
Mortimer.

2. A small quantity of money. I know not whence derived.

The bishops, who consecrated this ground, were wont to have a spill or sportule from the credulous laity.
Ayliffe.

To SPILL. v. a. [rpillan, Saxon; spillen, Dutch; spilla, Islandick.]

1. To shed; to lose by shedding.

Be satisfied, dear God, with our true blood,
Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt.
Shakspeare.

Friend or brother,
He forfeits his own blood that spills another.
Shakspeare.

Themselves exact their cruelty,
And I constrained am this blood to spill.
Daniel.

They having spilled much blood, and done much waste,

Subduing nations; and achiev'd thereby
Fame in the world, high titles, and rich prey;
Shall change their course to pleasure, ease, and sloth.
Milton.

Medea must not draw her murthering knife,
And spill her children's blood upon the stage.
Rescommon.

Orbellan did disgrace
With treach'rous deeds our mighty mother's race;
And to revenge his blood, so justly spilt,
What is it less than to partake his guilt? Dryden.

Nor the Centaur's tale
Be here repeated; how, with lust and wine
Inflam'd, they fought and spilt their drunken souls
At feasting hour.
Philips.

2. To destroy; to mischief.

Thus is our thought with pain of thistle tilled,
Thus be our noblest parts dried up with sorrow;
Thus is our mind with too much minding spilled.
Sidney.

Why are you so fierce and cruel?
It is because your eyes have power to kill?

Then know that mercy is the Mighty's jewel,
And greater glory think to save than spill. Spenser.

Thou all-shaking thunder,
Crack nature's mould, all germins spill at once
That make ingrateful man.
Shakspeare.

Be not angry with these fires;
For then their threats will kill me:
Nor look too kind on my desires;

For then my hopes will spill me. Ben Jonson.

All bodies are with other bodies fill'd;
But she receives both heav'n and earth together:

Nor are their forms by rash encounters spilled;
For there they stand, and neither toucheth either.
Davies.

3. To throw away.

This sight shall damp the raging ruffian's breast,
The poison spill, and half-drawn sword arrest.
Tickel.

To SPILL. v. n.

1. To waste; to be lavish.

Thy father bids thee spare, and chides for spilling.
Sidney.

2. To be shed; to be lost by being shed.

He was so topfull of himself, that he let it spill on all the company: he spoke well indeed, but he spoke too long.
Watts.

SPILLER. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A kind of fishing line.

In harbour they are taken by spillers made of a cord, to which divers shorter are tied at a little distance, and to each of these a hook is fastened with a bait: this spiller they sink in the sea where those fishes have their accustomed haunt. Carew.

SPILTH. n. f. [from spill.] Any thing poured out or wasted.

Our vaults have wept with drunken spilth of wine.
Shakspeare.

1. To draw out into threads.

The women spun goats hair. Exodus.

2. To form threads by drawing out and twisting any filamentous matter.

You would be another Penelope; yet all the yarn she spun, in Ulysses's absence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths.
Shakspeare.

The fates but only spin the coarser clue;
The finest of the wool is left for you. Dryden.

3. To protract; to draw out.

By one delay after another, they spin out their whole lives, till there's no more future left before 'em.
L'Estrange.

Why should Rome fall a moment ere her time?
No, let us draw her term of freedom out
In its full length, and spin it to the last. Addison.

4. To form by degrees; to draw out tediously.

I passed lightly over many particulars, on which learned and witty men might spin out large volumes.
Digby.

If his cure lies among the lawyers, let nothing be said against intangling property, spinning out causes, and squeezing clients.

Men of large thoughts and quick apprehensions are not to expect any thing here, but what, being spun out of my own coarse thoughts, is fitted to men of my own size.
Locke.

The lines are weak, another's pleas'd to say;
Lord Fanny spins a thousand such a day. Pope.

5. To put into a turning motion, as a boy's top.

To SPIN. v. n.

1. To exercise the art of spinning, or drawing threads.

We can fling our legs and arms upwards and downwards, back wards, forwards, and round, as they that spin. More.

Ten thousand stalks their various blossoms spread;
Peaceful and lowly in their native soil,
They neither know to spin, nor care to toil. Prior.

For this Alcides learn'd to spin;
His club laid down, and lion's skin. Prior.

2. [Spingare, Italian.] To stream out in a thread or small current.

Together furiously they ran,
That to the ground came horse and man;
The blood out of their helmets span,
So sharp were their encounters. Drayton.

3. To move round as a spindle.

Whether the sun, predominant in heav'n,
Rise on the earth, or earth rise on the sun;
He from the east his flaming road begin,
Or she from west her silent course advance
With inoffensive pace, that spinning sleeps
On her soft axle, while she paces ev'n
And bears thee soft with the smooth air along,
Solicit not thy thoughts. Milton.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble some huge beam to bore;
Urg'd on all hands, it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing till it scoops it out. Pope.

SPINACH. n. f. [spinachia, Lat.] A plant.

It hath an apetalous flower, consisting of many stamina included in the flower-cup, which are produced in spikes upon the male plants, which are barren; but the embryos are produced from the wings of the leaves on the female plants, which afterward become roundish or angular seeds, which,
in some sorts have thorns adhering to them. Miller.
Spinage is an excellent herb, crude or boiled.
Mortimer.

SPINAL. adj. [spina, Lat.] Belonging to the backbone.

All spinal, or such as have no ribs, but only a back bone, are somewhat analagous thereto. Brown.

Those solids are entirely nervous, and proceed from the brain and spinal marrow, which by their bulk appear sufficient to furnish all the stamina or threads of the solid parts. Arbutnot.

Descending careless from his couch, the fall
Lux'd his joint neck, and spinal marrow bruise'd.
Philips.

SPINDLE. n. f. [rpindl, rpindel, Sax.]

1. The pin by which the thread is formed, and on which it is conglomerated.

Bodies fibrous by moisture incorporate with other thread, especially if there be a little wreathing; as appeareth by the twisting of thread, and twirling about of spindles. Bacon.

Sing to those that hold the vital sheers,
And turn the adamantine spindle round
On which the fate of gods and men is wound.
Milton.

Upon a true repentance, God is not so fatally tied to the spindle of absolute reprobation, as not to keep his promise, and seal merciful pardons.
Jasper Maine.

So Pallas from the dusty field withdrew,
And, when imperial Jove appear'd in view,
Refum'd her female arts, the spindle and the clew;
Forgot the sceptre she so well had sway'd,
And, with that mildness she had rul'd, obey'd.
Stepney.

Do you take me for a Roman matron,
Bred tamely to the spindle and the loom? A. Philips.

2. A long slender stalk.

The spindles must be tied up, and, as they grow in height, rods set by them, lest by their bending they should break. Mortimer.

3. Any thing slender. In contempt.

Repose yourself, if those spindle legs of yours will carry you to the next chair. Dryden.

The marriage of one of our heiresses with an eminent courtier, gave us spindle thanks and cramps. Tatler.

To SPI'NDLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into a long small stalk.

Another ill accident in drought is the spindling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; inasmuch as the word calamity was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the stalk. Bacon.

When the flowers begin to spindle, all but one or two of the biggest, at each root, should be nipped off. Mortimer.

SPINDLESHA'NKED. adj. [spindle and shank.] Having small legs.

Which to the spire and top of praises vouch'd, Would seem but modest. Shakspere.

To SPIRE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shoot up pyramidically.

It is not so apt to spire up as the other sorts, being more inclined to branch into arms. Mortimer.

2. [spiro, Lat.] To breathe. Not in use. Spenser.

SPI'RIT. n. f. [spiritus, Lat.]

1. Breath; wind. All purges have in them a raw spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach. Bacon.

All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them; but the main difference between animate and inanimate are, that the spirits of things animate are all continued within themselves, and branched in veins as blood is; and the spirits have also certain seats where the principal do reside, and whereunto the rest do resort: but the spirits in things inanimate are shut in and cut off by the tangible parts, as air in snow. Bacon.

2. [esprit, Fr.] An immaterial substance; an intellectual being. The balmy spirit of the western breeze. Anon.

Spirit is a substance wherein thinking, knowing, doubting, and a power of moving, do subsist. Locke.

She is a spirit; yet not like air or wind, Nor like the spirits about the heart or brain; Nor like those spirits which alchymists do find, When they in ev'ry thing seek gold in vain: For the all natures under heav'n doth pass, Being like those spirits which God's bright face do see;

Or like himself, whose image once she was, Though now, alas! the scarce his shadow be:

For of all forms she holds the first degree, That are to gross material bodies knit;

Yet she herself is bodiless and free, And though confin'd is almost infinite. Devins.

I shall depend upon your constant friendship; like the trust we have in benevolent spirits, who, though we never see or hear them, we think are constantly praying for us. Pope.

If we seclude space, there will remain in the world but matter and mind, or body and spirit. Watts.

You are all of you pure spirits. I don't mean that you have not bodies that want meat and drink, and sleep and cloathing; but that all that deserves to be called you, is nothing else but spirit. Law.

3. The soul of man.

The spirit shall return unto God that gave it. Bible.

Look, who comes here? a grave unto a soul, Holding th' eternal spirit 'gainst her will In the vile prison of afflicted breath. Shakspere.

Every thing that you call yours, besides this spirit, is but like your cloathing: sometimes that is only to be used for a while, and then to end, and die, and wear away. Law.

4. An apparition.

They were terrified, and supposed that they had seen a spirit. Luke.

Perhaps you might see the image, and not the glass; the former appearing like a spirit in the air. Bacon.

A wild Tartar, when he spies A man that's handsome, valiant, wise, If he can kill him, thinks t' inherit His wit, his beauty, and his spirit. Butler.

The noblest spirit or genius cannot deserve enough of mankind, to pretend to the esteem of heroic virtue. Temple.

8. Turn of mind; power of mind, moral or intellectual.

You were us'd

To say extremity was the trier of spirits,
That common chances common men could bear.

Shakspeare.

I ask but half thy mighty spirit for me. Cowley.
A perfect judge will read each work of wit
With the same spirit that its author writ:
Survey the whole, nor seek slight fault to find,
Where nature moves, and rapture warms, the mind.

Pope.

9. Intellectual powers distinct from the body.

These discourses made so deep impression upon the mind and spirit of the prince, whose nature was inclined to adventures, that he was transported with the thought of it. Clarendon.

In spirit perhaps he also saw Rich Mexico, the seat of Montezume. Milton.

10. Sentiment; perception.

You are too great to be by me gainsaid:
Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain.

Shakspeare.

11. Eagerness; desire.

God has changed men's tempers with the times, and made a spirit of building succeed a spirit of pulling down. South.

12. Man of activity; man of life, fire, and enterprise.

The watry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits, but they come. Shakspeare.

13. Persons distinguished by qualities of the mind. A French word, happily growing obsolete.

Romish adversaries, from the rising up of some schismatical spirits amongst us, conclude that the main body of our church is schismatical, because some branches or members thereof were such.

White.

Oft pitying God did well-form'd spirits raise,
Fit for the toilsome bus'ness of their days,
To free the groaning nation, and to give Peace first, and then the rules in peace to live.

Cowley.

Such spirits as he desired to please, such would I chuse for my judges. Dryden.

14. That which gives vigour or cheerfulness to the mind; the purest part of the body, bordering, says Sydenham, on immateriality. In this meaning it is commonly written with the plural termination.

Though thou didst but jest,
With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake. Shakspeare.

When I sit and tell
The warlike feats I've done, his spirits fly out Into my story. Shakspeare.

Alas! when all our lamps are burn'd,
Our bodies wasted, and our spirits spent,
When we have all the learned volumes turn'd,
Which yield men's wits both help and ornament;
What can we know, or what can we discern?

Davies.

It was the time when gentle night began
To indrench with sleep the busy spirits of man.

Cowley.

To sing thy praise, would heav'n my breath prolong,
Infusing spirits worthy such a song,
Not Thracian Orpheus should transcend my lays.

Dryden.

All men by experience find the necessity and aid of the spirits in the business of concoction. Blackm.

By means of the curious insculcation of the auditory nerves, the organs of the spirits should be allayed. Derham.

In some fair body thus the secret soul
With spirits feeds, with vigour fills, the whole;
Each motion guides, and ev'ry nerve sustains,
Itself unseen, but in th' effects remains. Pope.

He is always forced to drink a hearty glass, to drive thoughts of business out of his head, and make his spirits drowsy enough for sleep. Law.

15. Characteristical likeness; essential qualities.

Italian pieces will appear best in a room where the windows are high, because they are commonly made to a descending light, which of all other doth set off men's faces in their truest spirit. Wotton.

16. Any thing eminently pure and refined.

Nor doth the eye itself,
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself. Shakspeare.

17. That which hath power or energy.

There is in wine a mighty spirit, that will not be congealed. South.

18. An inflammable liquor raised by distillation: as brandy, rum.

What the chymists call spirit, they apply the name to so many different things, that they seem to have no settled notion of the thing. In general, they give the name of spirit to any distilled volatile liquor. Boyle.

All spirits, by frequent use, destroy, and at last extinguish the natural heat of the stomach. Temple.

In distillations, what trickles down the sides of the receiver, if it will not mix with water, is oil;
if it will, it is spirit. Arbutnot.

19. It may be observed, that in the poets spirit was a monosyllable, and therefore was often written spright, or, less properly, sprite.

The charge thereof unto a courteous spright
Commanded was. Spenser.

Some, who pretend to be of a more spiritual and refined religion, spend their time in contemplation, and talk much of communion with God. Calamy.

4. Not temporal; relating to the things of heaven; ecclesiastical.

Place man in some publick society, civil or spiritual. Hooker.

Thou art reverend Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life.
Shakspeare.

I have made an offer to his majesty,
Upon our spiritual convocation,
As touching France, to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy did. Shakspeare.

Those servants, who have believing masters, are forbid to withdraw any thing of their worldly respect, as presuming upon their spiritual kindred; or to honour them less, because they are become their brethren in being believers. Kettleworth.

The clergy's business lies among the laity; nor is there a more effectual way to forward the salvation of men's souls, than for spiritual persons to make themselves as agreeable as they can in the conversations of the world. Swift.

She loves them as her spiritual children, and they reverence her as their spiritual mother, with an affection far above that of the fondest friends.
Law.

SPIRITUALITY. n. s. [from spiritual.]

1. Incorporeity; immateriality; essence distinct from matter.

If this light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth

To the spittle go,
And from the powdering tub of infamy
Fetch forth the lazar kite of Cressid's kind. Shaks.
This is it

That makes the waned widow wed again,
She whom the spittle house, and ulcerous sores,
Would cast the gorge at; this embalms and spices
To th' April-day again. Shakspeare.

Cure the spittle world of maladies. Cleaveland.

SPI'TTLE. n. f. [græc. saliva, Sax.] Moisture of the mouth.

The saliva or spittle is an humour of eminent use. Ray.

Mænas and Atys in the mouth were bred,
And never hatch'd within the lab'ring head;
No blood from bitten nails those poems drew,
But churn'd like spittle from the lips they flew. Dryden.

The spittle is an active liquor, immediately derived from the arterial blood: it is saponaceous. Arbuthnot.

A genius for all stations fit,
Whose meanest talent is his wit:
His heart too great, though fortune little,
To lick a rascal statesman's spittle. Swift.

SPLA'YFOOT. adj. [splay, or display, and foot.] Having the foot turned inward.
Though still some traces of our rustic vein
And splayfoot verse remain'd, and will remain. Pope.

SPLA'YMOUTH. n. f. [splay and mouth.] Mouth widened by design.

All authors to their own defects are blind:
Hast thou but, Janus-like, a face behind,
To see the people when splaymouths they make,
To mark their fingers pointed at thy back,
Their tongues loll'd out a foot. Dryden.

SPLEEN. n. f. [splen, Latin.]

1. The milt; one of the viscera, of which the use is scarcely known. It is supposed the seat of anger, melancholy, and mirth.

If the wound be on the left hypochondrium, under the short ribs, you may conclude the spleen wounded. Wifeman.

2. Anger; spite; ill humour.

His solemn queen, whose spleene he was dispos'd
To tempt yet further, knowing well what anger it inclos'd,
And how wives' angers should be us'd. Chapman.

If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live
And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her. Shaks.

Kind pity checks my spleen; brave scorn forbids
Those tears to issue, which swell my eye-lids. Donne.

All envied; but the Theftyan brethren shew'd
The least respect, and thus they vent their spleen aloud:

Lay down those honour'd spoils. Dryden.

In noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain. Pope.

3. A fit of anger.

Charge not in your spleen a noble person,
And spoil your nobler soul. Shakspeare.

4. A sudden motion; a fit.

Brief as the lightning in the collied night,
That in a spleen unfolds both heav'n and earth;
And ere a man hath power to say behold!
The jaws of darkness do devour it up. Shakspeare.

5. Melancholy; hypochondriacal vapours.

The spleen with sullen vapours clouds the brain,
And binds the spirits in its heavy chain;
Howe'er the cause fantastick may appear,
Th' effect is real, and the pain sincere. Blackmore.
Spleen, vapours, and small-pox above them all. Pope.

Bodies chang'd to recent forms by spleen. Pope.

6. Immoderate merriment.

They that desire the spleen, and would die with laughing. Shakspeare.

not be denied but that you live neatly and elegantly. More.

How he lives and eats,
How largely gives, how splendidly he treats. Dryden.
He, of the royal store

Splendidly frugal, fits whole nights devoid
Of sweet repose. Philips.

SPLE'NDOUR. n. f. [splendeur, French; splendor, Latin.]

1. Lustre; power of shining.

Splendour hath a degree of whiteness, especially if there be a little repercussion; for a looking-glass, with the steel behind, looketh whiter than glass simple. Bacon.

The dignity of gold above silver is not much; the splendour is alike, and more pleasing to some eyes, as in cloth of silver. Bacon.

The first symptoms are a chiliness, a certain splendour or shining in the eyes, with a little moisture. Arbuthnot.

2. Magnificence; pomp.

Romulus, being to give laws to his new Romans, found no better way to procure an esteem and reverence to them, than by first procuring it to himself by splendour of habit and retinue. South.

'Tis use alone that sanctifies expence,
And splendour borrows all her rays from sense. Pope.

SPLE'NETICK. adj. [spleneticque, French.]

Troubled with the spleen; fretful; peevish.

Horace purged himself from these splenetic reflections in odes and epodes, before he undertook his satires. Dryden.

This daughter silently lowers, t' other steals a kind look at you, a third is exactly well behaved, and a fourth a splenetic. Tatler.

You humour me when I am sick;
Why not when I am splenetic? Pope.

SPLE'NICK. adj. [splenique, French; splen, Latin.] Belonging to the spleen.

Suppose the spleen obstructed in its lower parts and splenick branch, a potent heat causeth the organismus to boil. Hervæy.

The splenick vein hath divers cells opening into it near its extremities in human bodies; but in quadrupeds the cells open into the trunks of the splenick veins. Ray.

SPLE'NISH. adj. [from spleen.] Fretful; peevish.

Yourselves you must engage Somewhat to cool your splenish rage,
Your grievous thirst; and to assuage
That first, you drink this liquor. Drayton.

SPLE'NITIVE. adj. [from spleen.] Hot; fiery; passionate. Not in use.

Take thy fingers from my throat;
For though I am not splenitive and rash,
Yet I have in me something dangerous. Shakspeare.

SPIENT. n. f. [or perhaps splint; spinella, Italian.]

Splents is a callous hard substance, or an insensible swelling, which breeds on or adheres to the shank-bone of a horse, and, when it grows big, spoils the shape of the leg. When there is but one, it is called a single splint; but when there is another opposite to it, on the outside of a shank-bone, it is called a pegged or pinned splint. Farrier's Dict.

To SPLICE. v. a. [splissen, Dutch; plico, Latin.] To join the two ends of a rope without a knot.

SPLINT. n. f. [splinter, Dutch.]

This three years day, these eyes, though clear
To outward view of blemish or of spot,
Bereft of sight, their seeing have forgot. Milton.

A long series of ancestors shews the native lustre with advantage; but if he any way degenerate from his line, the least spot is visible on ermine. Dryden.

2. A taint; a disgrace; a reproach; a fault.

Yet Chloe sure was form'd without a spot;
'Tis true, but something in her was forgot. Pope.

3. I know not well the meaning of spot in this place, unless it be a scandalous woman, a disgrace to her sex.

Let him take thee,
And hoist thee up to th' shouting plebeians;
Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy sex. Shakspeare.

4. A small extent of place.

That spot to which I point is paradise,
Adam's abode; those lofty shades, his bow'r. Milton.

He who, with Plato, shall place beatitude in the knowledge of God, will have his thoughts raised to other contemplations than those who looked not beyond this spot of earth, and those perishing things in it. Locke.

About one of these breathing passages is a spot of myrtles, that flourish within the steam of these vapours. Addison.

Abdallah converted the whole mountain into a kind of garden, and covered every part of it with plantations or spots of flowers. Guardian.

He that could make two ears of corn grow upon a spot of ground where only one grew before, would deserve better of mankind than the whole race of politicians. Swift.

5. Any particular place.

I would be busy in the world, and learn;
Not, like a coarse and useless dunghill weed,
Fix'd to one spot, and rot just as I grow. Orway.

As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell,
So the my prey becomes ev'n here. Dryden.

Here Adrian fell: upon that fatal spot
Our brother died. Granville.

The Dutch landscapes are, I think, always a representation of an individual spot, and each in its kind a very faithful, but very confined, portrait. Reynolds.

6. Upon the SPOT. Immediately; without changing place. [sur le champ.]

The lion did not chop him up immediately upon the spot; and yet he was resolved he should not escape. L'Esrange.

Through optick glass the Tuscan artist views
In Volambrosa to descry new lands,
Rivers, or mountains, on her spotty globe. Milton.

SPOUSAL. adj. [from spouse.]

Nuptial; matrimonial; conjugal; connubial; bridal.

There shall we consummate our spousal rites. Shakspeare.

Hope's chaste kiss wrongs no more joy's maidenhead,
Than spousal rites prejudice the marriage bed. Crafton.

This other, in her prime of love,
Spousal embraces vitiated with gold. Milton.

Sleep't thou, careless of the nuptial day?
Thy spousal ornament neglected lies;
Arise, prepare the bridal train, arise. Pope.

SPOUSAL. n. f. [from sponsailles, Fr. sponsalia, Lat.]

Marriage; nuptials.

As man and wife, being two, are one in love,
So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal,
That never may ill office, or fell jealousy,
Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms,
To make divorce of their incorporate league. Shakspeare.

The amorous bird of night
Sung spousal, and bid haste the ev'ning star,
On his hill top to light the bridal lamp. Milton.

The spousals of Hippolita the queen,
What tilts and tourneys at the feast were seen! Dryden.

Ætherial musick did her death prepare,
Like joyful sounds of spousals in the air:
A radiant light did her crown'd temples gild. Dryden.

SPOUSE. n. f. [sponsa, sponsus, Latin; espouse, French.] One joined in marriage; a husband or wife.

She is of good esteem;
Beside, so qualified as may beseem
The spouse of any noble gentleman. Shakspeare.
At once, farewell, O faithful spouse they said;
At once th' encroaching rinds their closing lips invade. Dryden.

SPOUSED. adj. [from the noun.] Wedded; espoused; joined together as in matrimony.

1. A pipe, or mouth of a pipe or vessel, out of which any thing is poured.

She gasping to begin some speech, her eyes Became two spouts. Shakspeare.

In whales that breathe, lest the water should get unto the lungs, an ejection thereof is contrived by a fistula or spout at the head. Brown.

If you chance it to lack,
Be it claret or sack,
I'll make this snout
To deal it about,
Or this to run out,
As it were from a spout. Ben Jonson.

As waters did in storms, now pitch runs out,
As lead, when a fir'd church becomes one spout.
Donne.

In Gaza they couch vessels of earth in their walls, to gather the wind from the top, and to pass it down in spouts into rooms. Bacon.

Let the water be fed by some higher than the pool, and delivered into it by fair spouts, and then discharged by some equality of bores, that it stay little. Bacon.

In this single cathedral, the very spouts are loaded with ornaments. Addison.

From silver spouts the grateful liquors glide,
And China's earth receives the smoking tide. Pope.

2. Water falling in a body; a cataract, such as is seen in the hot climates, when clouds sometimes discharge all their water at once.

Not the dreadful spout,
Which shipmen do the hurricano call,
Constring'd in mafs by the almighty fun,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent, than shall my prompted sword Falling on Diomedes. Shakspeare.

The force of these motions pressing more in some places than in others, there would fall not showers, but great spouts or cascades of water. Burnet.

TO SPOUT. v. a. [from the noun.] To pour with violence, or in a collected body, as from a spout.

We will bear home that lusty blood again,
Which here we came to spout against your town.

Shakspeare.

With many a gash and bloody wound. Hudibras.

2. To tumble or creep with much agitation and contortion of the limbs.

The birds were not fledged; but, upon sprawling and struggling to get clear of the flame, down they tumbled. L'Estrange.

Telamon hap'd to meet
A rising root that held his fasten'd feet;
So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground
His brother from the wooden gyves unbound.
Dryden.

Hence, long before the child can crawl,
He learns to kick, and wince, and sprawl. Prior.
Did the stars do this feat once only, which gave beginning to human race? who were there then in the world, to observe the births of those first men, and calculate their nativities, as they sprawled out of ditches? Bentley.

He ran, he leapt into a flood,
There sprawl'd a while, and scarce got out,
All cover'd o'er with slime. Swift.

SPRAY. n. f. [of the same race with sprit
and spout.]

1. The extremity of a branch.

At sight whereof each bird that sits on spray,
And every beast that to his den was fled,
Come forth afresh out of their late dismay,
And to the light lift up their drooping head.
Hubbard's Tale.

Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays,
Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her younger days.
Shakspeare.

The wind that whistles through the sprays
Maintains the consort of the song;
And hidden birds, with native lays,
The golden sleep prolong. Dryden.

but it is probably of the same race with spring.] A small branch; a spray.

The substance is true ivy; after it is taken down, the friends of the family are desirous to have some sprig to keep. Bacon.

Our chilling climate hardly bears
A sprig of bays in fifty years;
While ev'ry fool his claim alleges,
As if it grew in common hedges. Swift.

SPRIG CHRYSAL. n. f.

In perpendicular fissures, chrysal is found in form of an hexangular column, adhering at one end to the stone, and near the other lessening gradually, till it terminates in a point: this is called by lapidaries sprig or rock chrysal. Woodward.

SPRIGGY. adj. [from spring.] Full of small branches.

SPRIGT. n. s. [contraction of spirit; spiritus, Latin. It was anciently written sprete or spryte; and spirit, as now written, was long considered in verse as a monosyllable: this word should therefore be spelled sprite, and its derivatives sprite, spriteful; but custom has determined otherwise.]

1. Spirit; shade; soul; incorporeal agent.

She doth display
The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
Through which her words so wise do make their way,

To bear the message of her spright. Spenser.

Forth he called out of deep darkness dread

Legions of sprights, the which, like little flies

Flutt'ring about his ever-damned head,

Await whereto their service he applies. F. Queen.

While with heav'nly charity she spoke,

A streaming blaze the silent shadows broke;

The birds obscene to forests wing'd their flight,

And gaping graves receiv'd the guilty spright. Dryden.

2. Walking spirit; apparition.

The ideas of goblins and sprights have no more to do with darkness than light; yet let but a foolish maid inculcate these often on the mind of a child, possibly he shall never be able to separate them again. Locke.

3. Power which gives cheerfulness or courage.

O chastity! the chief of heav'nly lights,

Which mak'it us most immortal shape to wear,

Hold thou my heart, establish thou my sprights;

To only thee my constant course I bear,

Till spotless soul unto thy bosom fly;

Such life to lead, such death I vow to die. Sidney.

4. An arrow. Not in use.

We had in use for sea fight short arrows called sprights, without any other heads save wood sharpened; which were discharged out of muskets, and would pierce through the sides of ships where a bullet would not. Bacon.

1. To arise out of the ground, and grow, by vegetative power.

All blest secrets,

All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,

Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate

In the good man's distress. Shakspeare.

To his musick plants and flowers

Ever sprung, as sun and showers

There had made a lasting spring. Shakspeare.

To satisfy the desolate ground, and cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth. Job.

Other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that sprung up and increased. Mark.

Tell me, in what happy fields

The thistle springs, to which the lily yields? Pope.

2. To begin to grow.

That the nipples should be made with such perforations as to admit passage to the milk when drawn, otherwise to retain it; and the teeth of the young not sprung are effects of providence. Ray.

3. To proceed as from seed.

You shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves; and in the second year that which *springs*eth of the same. 2 Kings.

Much more good of sin shall spring. Milton.

4. To come into existence; to issue forth.

Hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,

Giving no ground unto the house of York,

They never then had sprung like summer flies. Shakspeare.

Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips it

part,

And each warm wish springs mutual from the heart. Pope.

5. To arise; to appear; to begin to appear or to exist.

When the day began to spring, they let her go. Judges.

To them which sat in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up. Matthew.

Fly, fly, prophane togs! far hence fly away,

Taint not the pure streams of the springing day

With your dull influence: it is for you

To sit and scowl upon night's heavy brow. Craff.

Do not blait my springing hopes,

Which thy kind hand has planted in my soul. Roswe.

6. To issue with effect or force.

Swift fly the years, and rise th' expected morn!

Oh spring to light, auspicious babe, be born! Pope.

7. To proceed as from ancestors, or a country.

How youngly he began to serve his country,

How long continued; and what stock he springs of;

The noble house of Marcius. Shakspeare.

Our Lord sprung out of Judea. Hebrews.

All these

Shall, like the brethren sprung of dragon's teeth,

Ruin each other, and he fall amongst 'em. Jonson.

Heroes of old, by rapine and by spoil,

In search of fame did all the world embroil;

Thus to their gods each then allied his name,

This sprung from Jove, and that from Titan came. Granville.

8. To proceed as from a ground, cause, or reason.

They found new hope to spring

Out of despair. Milton.

Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, sprung from the same original, and descend by the same rules. Locke.

9. To grow; to thrive.

What makes all this but Jupiter the king,

At whose command we perish and we spring?

Then 'tis our best, since thus ordain'd to die,

To make a virtue of necessity. Dryden.

10. To bound; to leap; to jump; to rush hastily; to appear suddenly.

Some strange commotion

Is in his brain; he bites his lip, and starts;

Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,

Then lays his finger on his temple; straight springs out into fast gait, then stops again. Shakspeare.

I sprung not more in joy at first hearing he was a man child, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man. Shakspeare.

He called for a light, and sprung in, and fell before Paul. Acts.

When heav'n was nam'd, they loos'd their hold again;

Then sprung she forth, they follow'd her again. Dryden.

Afraid to sleep,

Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap

She sprung from bed. Dryden.

Nor lies she long; but, as her fates ordain,

Springs up to life; and, fresh to second pain,

Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

See, aw'd by heav'n, the blooming Hebrew flies

Her artful tongue, and more persuasive eyes;

And, springing from her disappointed arms,

Prefers a dungeon to forbidden charms. Blackmore.

The mountain stag that springs

From height to height, and bounds along the plains,

Nor has a master to retain his course,

That mountain stag would Vanoe rather be

Than be a slave. Philips.

11. To fly with elastic power; to start.

A link of horsehair, that will easily slip, fasten to the end of the stick that springs. Mortimer.

12. To rise from a covert.

My doors are hateful to my eyes,

Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,

Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring. Orway.

A covey of partridges springing in our front, put our infantry in disorder. Addison.

13. To issue from a fountain.

Israel's servants digged in the valley, and found a well of springing water. Genesis.

Let the wide world his praises sing,

Where Tagus and Euphrates spring;

And from the Danube's frosty banks to those

Where from an unknown head great Nilus flows. Roscommon.

14. To proceed as from a source.

'Tis true from force the noblest title springs,

I therefore hold from that which first made kings. Dryden.

15. To shoot; to issue with speed and violence.

Then shook the sacred shrine, and sudden light

Sprung thro' the vaulted roof, and made the temple

bright:

The pow'r, behold! the pow'r in glory shone,

By her bent bow and her keen arrows known. Dryden.

The friendly gods a springing gale enlarg'd;

The fleet swift tilting o'er the furies flew,

Till Grecian cliffs appear'd. Pope.

To SPRING. v. a.

1. To start; to rouse game.

Thus I reclaim'd my buzzard love to fly

At what, and when, and how, and where I chose;

Now negligent of sport I lie;

And now, as other fawknars use,

I spring a mistress, swear, write, sigh, and die;

And the game kill'd, or lost, go talk or lie. Danne.

That sprung the game you were to set,

Before you'd time to draw the net. Hudibras.

A large cock pheasant he sprung in one of the neighbouring woods. Speator.

Here I use a great deal of diligence before I can spring any thing; whereas in town, whilst I am following one character, I am crossed by another, that they puzzle the chase. Addison.

See how the well-taught pointer leads the way!

The scent grows warm; he stops, he springs the prey. Gay.

2. To produce quickly or unexpectedly.

The nurse, surpris'd with fright,

Starts up and leaves her bed, and springs a light. Dryden.

Thus man by his own strength to heav'n would soar,

And would not be oblig'd to God for more:

Vain, wretched creature, how art thou misled,

To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!

These truths are not the product of thy mind,

But dropt from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:

Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy fight,

And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light. Dryden.

He that has such a burning zeal, and *spring*s such mighty discoveries, must needs be an admirable patriot. Collier.

3. To make by starting: applied to a ship. People discharge themselves of burdensome reflections, as of the cargo of a ship that has sprung a leak. L'Estrange.

No more accuse thy pen; but charge the crime On native sloth, and negligence of time: Beware the publick laughter of the town, Thou spring'st a leak already in thy crown. Dryd.

Whether she sprung a leak, I cannot find, Or whether she was overfet with wind, But down at once with all her crew she went. Dryden.

4. To discharge: applied to a mine.

Our miners discovered several of the enemies mines, who have sprung divers others which did little execution. Tatler.

I sprung a mine, whereby the whole nest was overthrown. Addison.

5. To contrive on a sudden; to produce hastily; to offer unexpectedly.

The friends to the cause sprang a new project; and it was advertised that the crisis could not appear, till the ladies had shewn their zeal against the Pretender. Swift.

6. To pass by leaping. A barbarous use.

Unbecoming skill To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed. Thomson.

7. Of the verb spring the primary sense is to grow out of the ground: so plants spring, thence spring for the season; so water springs, thence spring for a fountain. Plants rise unexpectedly, and waters break out violently; thence any thing done suddenly, or coming hastily, is said to spring; thence spring means an elastick body. Thus the active significations all import suddenness or force.

SPRING. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The season in which plants rise and vegetate; the vernal season.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing:
To his musick plants and flowers
Ever sprung, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring. Shakspeare.

The spring visiteth not these quarters so timely as the eastern parts. Carew.

Come, gentle spring, ethereal mildness come,
And from the bosom of yon dropping cloud
Upon our plains descend. Thomson.

2. An elastick body; a body which, when distorted, has the power of restoring itself to its former state.

This may be performed by the strength of some such spring as is used in watches: this spring may be applied to one wheel, which shall give an equal motion to both the wings. Wilkins.

The spring must be made of good steel, well tempered; and the wider the two ends of the spring stand asunder, the wider it throws the chape of the vice open. Mexon.

He that was sharp-sighted enough to see the configuration of the minute particles of the spring of a clock, and upon what peculiar impulse its elastick motion depends, would no doubt discover something very admirable. Locke.

3. Elastick force.

Heav'n's, what a spring was in his arm, to throw! How high he held his shield, and rose at ev'ry blow! Dryden.

Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another: impenetrability makes them only stop. If two equal bodies meet directly in vacuo, they will by the laws of motion stop where they meet, lose their motion, and remain in rest; unless they be elastick, and receive new motion from their spring. Newton.

The soul is gathered within herself, and recovers that spring, which is weakened when she operates more in concert with the body. Addison.

In adult persons, when the fibres cannot any more yield, they must break, or lose their spring. Arbutnot.

4. Any active power; any cause by which motion or action is produced or propagated.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the *spring*s of life;
So much the name of father awes me still. Dryden.

Nature is the same, and man is the same, has the same affections and passions, and the same *spring*s that give them motion. Rymer.

Our author shuns by vulgar *spring*s to move. Pope.

5. A leap; a bound; a jump; a violent effort; a sudden struggle.

The pris'ner with a spring from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.

With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground! Addison.

6. A leak; a start of plank.

Each petty hand
Can steer a ship becalm'd; but he that will Govern, and carry her to her ends, must know
His tides, his currents; how to shift his sails;
Where her *spring*s are, her leaks, and how to stop
'em. Ben Jonson.

7. A fountain; an issue of water from the earth.

Now stop thy *spring*s; my sea shall suck them dry,
And swell so much the higher by their ebb. Shaksf.
Springs on the tops of hills pass through a great deal of pure earth, with less mixture of other waters. Bacon.

When in th' effects she doth the causes know,
And seeing the stream, thinks where the spring doth rise;

And seeing the branch, conceives the root below;
These things she views without the body's eyes. Davies.

He adds the running *spring*s and standing lakes,
And bounding banks for winding rivers makes. Dryden.

Nile hears him knocking at his sevenfold gates,
And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews fates. Dryden.

He bathed himself in cold spring water in the midst of winter. Locke.

The water that falls down from the clouds, sinking into beds of rock or clay, breaks out in *spring*s, commonly at the bottom of hilly ground. Locke.

8. A source; that by which any thing is supplied.

To that great spring which doth great kingdoms move,

The sacred spring whence right and honour streams;
Distilling virtue, shedding peace and love
In every place, as Cynthia sheds her beams. Davies.

I move, I see, I speak, discourse, and know;
Though now I am, I was not always so:
Then that from which I was must be before,
Whom, as my spring of being, I adore. Dryden.

Rolling down through so many barbarous ages, from the spring of Virgil, it bears along with it the filth of the Goths and Vandals. Dryden.

He has a secret spring of spiritual joy, and the continual feast of a good conscience within, that forbids him to be miserable. Bentley.

9. Rise; beginning.

About the spring of the day, Samuel called Saul to the top of the house. 1 Samuel.

10. Cause; original.

The reason of the quicker or slower termination of this distemper, arises from these three *spring*s. Blackmore.

The first *spring*s of great events, like those of great rivers, are often mean and little. Swift.

- SPRING. } n. f. A youth. Obsolete.
SPRINGAL. }

Before the bull she pictur'd winged love,
With his young brother sport, light fluttering
Upon the waves, as each had been a dove;
The one his bow and shafts, the other spring
A burning tead about his head did move,
As in their fire's new love both triumphing. Spenser.

SPRINGE. n. f. [from spring.] A gin; a noose which, fastened to any elastick body, catches by a spring or jerk.

As a woodcock to my own springe, Ofrick,
I'm justly kill'd with mine own treachery. Shaksf.
Let goats for food their loaded udders lend,
But neither springes, nets, nor snares employ. Dryd.
With hairy springes we the birds betray,
Slight lines of hair surprize the finny prey. Pope.

SPRINGER. n. f. [from spring.] One who rouses game.

SPRINGHALT. n. f. [spring and halt.]
A lameness by which the horse twitches up his legs.

They've all new legs, and lame ones: one would take it,
That never saw them pace before, the spavin
And springhalt reign'd among them. Shakspeare.

SPRINGINESS. n. f. [from springy.] Elasticity; power of restoring itself.

When there is a continued endeavour of the parts of a body to put themselves into another state, the progress may be much more slow; since it was a great while before the texture of the corpuscles of the steel were so altered as to make them lose their former springiness. Boyle.

The air is a thin fluid body, endowed with elasticity and springiness, capable of condensation and rarefaction. Bentley.

SPRINGLE. n. f. [from spring.] A springe;
an elastick noose.

Woodcocks arrive first on the north coast, where every plash shoot serveth for springles to take them. Carew.

To SPRINGLE. v. a. Misprinted, I suppose, for sprinkle.

This is Timon's last,
Who, stuck and spangled with your flatteries,
Washes it off, and springles in your faces
Your reeking villany. Shakspeare.

SPRINGTIDE. n. f. [spring and tide.]
Tide at the new and full moon; high tide.

Love, like springtides, full and high,
Swells in every youthful vein;
But each tide does less supply,
Till they quite shrink in again:
If a flow in age appear,
'Tis but rain, and runs not clear. Dryden.

Most people die when the moon chiefly reigns;
that is, in the night, or upon or near a springtide. Grew.

SPRINGY. adj. [from springe.]

1. Elastick; having the power of restoring itself.

Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame,
Such as it is, to fan the vital flame,
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had cool'd and languish'd in th' arterial road;
While the tir'd heart had strove, with fruitless pain,
To push the lazy tide along the vein. Blackmore.

This vast contraction and expansion seems unintelligible, by feigning the particles of air to be springy and ramous, or rolled up like hoops, or by any other means than a repulsive power. Newton.

Though the bundle of fibres which constitute the muscles may be small, the fibres may be strong and springy. Arbutnot.

If our air had not been a springy body, no animal could have exercised the very function of respiration; and yet the ends of respiration are not served by that springiness, but by some other unknown quality. Bentley.

2. [from spring.] Full of springs or fountains. Not used.

Where the sandy or gravelly lands are springy or wet; rather marl them for grafs than corn. Mortimer.

To SPRINKLE. v. a. [sprinkelen, Dutch.]

1. To scatter; to disperse in small masses.

Take handfuls of ashes of the furnace, and let Moses sprinkle it towards the heaven. Exodus.

2. To scatter in drops.

Sprinkle water of purifying upon them. Numbers.

3. To besprinkle; to wash, wet, or dust by scattering in small particles.

Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience. Hebrews.

Wings he wore
Of many a colour'd plume sprinkled with gold. Milton.

The prince, with living water sprinkled o'er
His limbs and body; then approach'd the door, Possess'd the porch. Dryden.

To SPRINKLE. v. n. To perform the act of scattering in small drops.

The priest shall sprinkle of the oil with his finger. Leviticus.

Baptism may well enough be performed by sprinkling, or effusion of water. Ayliffe.

When dext'rous damsels twirl the sprinkling mop,
And cleanse the spatter'd sash, and scrub the stairs, Know Saturday appears. Gay.

SPRINKLER. n. f. [from sprinkle.] One that sprinkles.

To SPRIT. v. a. [spnytan, Sax. spuyten, Dutch.] To throw out; to eject with force. Commonly spirit.

Toads sometimes exclude or spirit out a dark and liquid matter behind, and a venomous condition there may be perhaps therein; but it cannot be called their urine. Brown.

To SPRIT. v. n. To shoot; to germinate; to sprout. Used of barley wetted for malt.

SPRIT. n. f. [from the verb.] Shoot; sprout.

The barley, after it has been couched four days, will sweat a little, and shew the chit or spirit at the root-end of the corn. Mortimer.

SPRIT'SAIL. n. f. [spirit and sail.] The sail which belongs to the boltsprit mast. DiA.

Our men quitted themselves of the fire-ship, by cutting the spirit-sail tackle off with their short hatchets. Wifeman.

SPRITE. n. f. [contracted from spirit.] A spirit; an incorporeal agent.

The sprites of fiery termagants in flame
Mount up, and take a salamander's name. Pope.
Of these am I who thy protection claim;
A watchful sprite, and Ariel is my name. Pope.

SPRITEFULLY. adv. [See SPRIGHTFULLY.] Vigorously; with life and ardour.

The Grecians spritefully drew from the darts the corse,
And heart it, bearing it to fleet. Chapman.

SPRITELY. adv. [from sprite.] Gayly.

You have not seene young heifers, highly kept,
Fill'd full of daisies at the field, and driven Home to their hovels; all so *sprite*ly given,
That no roome can containe them. Chapman.

SPRONG. The old pret. of spring.

Not mistrusting, till these new curiosities sprong up, that ever any man would think our labour herein mispent, or the time wastefully consumed. Hooker.

To SPROUT. v. n. [spnytan, Saxon; spuyten, Dutch. Sprout, sprit, and by a very frequent transposition spirt or spurt, are all the same word.]

1. To shoot by vegetation; to germinate.

The sprouting leaves that saw you here,
And call'd their fellows to the fight. Cowley.

Try whether these things in the sprouting do increase weight, by weighing them before they are hanged up; and afterwards again, when they are sprouted. Bacon.

That leaf faded, but the young buds sprouted on, which afterwards opened into fair leaves. Bacon.

We find no security to prevent germination, having made trial of grains, whose ends, cut off, have notwithstanding sprouted. Brown.

Old Baucis is by old Philemon seen Sprouting with sudden leaves of sprightly green. Dryden.

Hence sprouting plants enrich the plain and wood;
For physick some, and some design'd for food. Blackmore.

Envied Britannia, sturdy as the oak
Which on her mountain top she proudly bears,
Eludes the ax, and sprouts against the stroke,
Strong from her wounds, and greater by her wars. Prior.

Rub malt between your hands to get the come or sprouting clean away. Mortimer.

2. To shoot into ramifications.

Vitriol is apt to sprout with moisture. Bacon.

3. To grow.

Th' enliv'ning dust its head begins to rear,
And on the ashes sprouting plumes appear. Tickel.

SPROUT. n. f. [from the verb.] A shoot of a vegetable.

Stumps of trees, lying out of the ground, will put forth sprouts for a time. Bacon.

Early, ere the odorous breath of morn
Awakes the slumbering leaves, or tassell'd horn Shakes the high thicket, haste I all about,
Number my ranks, and visit every sprout. Milton.

To this kid, taken out of the womb, were brought
In the tender sprouts of shrubs; and, after it had tasted, it began to eat of such as are the usual food of goats. Ray.

SPROUTS. n. f. pl. [from sprout.] Young coleworts.

SPRUCE. adj. [Skinner derives this word from preux, French; but he proposes it with hesitation: Junius thinks it comes from sprout: Casaubon trifles yet more contemptibly. I know not whence to deduce it, except from pruce. In ancient books we find furniture of pruce a thing costly and elegant, and thence probably came spruce.] Nice; trim; neat without elegance. It was anciently used of things with a serious meaning; it is now used only of persons, and with levity.

The tree
That wraps that crystal in a wooden tomb,
Shall be took up spruce, fill'd with diamond. Donne.
Thou wilt not leave me in the middle street,
Tho' some more spruce companion thou dost meet. Donne.

Along the crisped shades and bow'rs
Revels the spruce and jocund spring;
The graces, and the rosy-bosom'd hours,
Thither all their bounties bring. Milton.

I must not slip into too spruce a style for serious matters; and yet I approve not that dull insipid way of writing practised by many chymists. Boyle.
He put his band and beard in order,
The sprucer to accost and board her. Hudibras.
He is so spruce, that he never can be genteel. Tatler.

This Tim makes a strange figure with that ragged coat under his livery: can't he go spruce and clean? Arbutnot.

To SPRUCE. v. n. [from the adjective.] To dress with affected neatness.

SPRUCE. n. f. A species of fir.

SPRUCEBEER. n. f. [from spruce, a kind of fir.] Beer tinged with branches of fir.

In ulcers of the kidneys, sprucebeer is a good balsamick. Arbutnot.

SPRU'CELEATHER. n. f. [corrupted for Prussian leather.] Ainsworth.

The leather was of Pruce. Dryden.

SPRU'CELY. adv. [from spruce.] In a nice manner.

SPRU'CENESS. n. f. [from spruce.] Neatness without elegance.

SPRUNG. The pret. and part. pass. of spring.

S P U

Tall Norway fir their masts in battle spent,
And English oaks sprung leaks and planks restore. Dryden.

Now from beneath Maleas' airy height
Aloft the sprung, and steer'd to Thebes her flight. Pope.

Who sprung from kings shall know less joy than I. Pope.

SPRUNT. n. f. Any thing that is short and will not easily bend.

SPUD. n. f. A short knife; any short thick thing, in contempt.

My love to Sheelah is more firmly fixt
Than strongest weeds that grow these stones betwixt;
My spud these nettles from the stones can part,
No knife so keen to weed thee from my heart. Swift.

SPULLERS of Yarn. n. f. [perhaps properly spoolers.] Are such as are employed to see that it be well spun, and fit for the loom. DiA.

SPUME. n. f. [spuma, Latin.] Foam; froth.

Materials dark and crude,
Of spirituous and fiery spume, till touch'd
With heaven's ray, and temper'd, they shoot forth
So beauteous, op'ning to the ambient light. Milton.

Waters frozen in pans, after their dissolution, leave a froth and spume upon them, which are caused by the airy parts diffused by the congealable mixture. Brown.

To SPUME. v. n. [spumo, Latin.] To foam; to froth.

SPUMOUS. } adj. [spumeus, Latin; from SPUMY. } the noun.] Frothy; foamy.

The cause is the putrefaction of the body by unnatural heat: the putrifying parts suffer a turgescence, and becoming airy and spumous, ascend into the surface of the water. Brown.

Not with more madness, rolling from afar,
The spumy waves proclaim the wat'ry war;
And mounting upwards with a mighty roar,
March onwards, and insult the rocky shore. Dryd.

The spumous and florid state of the blood, in passing through the lungs, arises from its own elasticity, and its violent motion, the aerial particles expanding themselves. Arbutnot.

SPUN. The pret. and part. pass. of spin.

The nymph nor spun, nor dress'd with artful pride;
Her vest was gather'd up, her hair was tied. Addison.

SPUNGE. n. f. [spongia, Latin.] A sponge.

See SPONGE.
When he needs what you have gleaned, it is but squeezing you, and, spunge, you shall be dry again. Shakspeare.

Considering the motion that was impressed by the painter's hand upon the sponge, compounded with the specific gravity of the sponge, and the resistance of the air, the sponge did mechanically and unavoidably move in that particular line of motion. Bentley.

To SPUNGE. v. n. [rather To sponge.] To hang on others for maintenance.

This will maintain you, with the perquisite of sponging while you are young. Swift.

SPUNGINGHOUSE. n. f. [sponge and house.] A house to which debtors are taken before commitment to prison, where the bailiffs sponge upon them, or riot at their cost.

A bailiff kept you the whole evening in a sponginghouse. Swift.

SPUNGY. adj. [from sponge.]

1. Full of small holes, and soft like a sponge.

Some English wool, vex'd in a Belgian loom,
And into cloth of spungy softness made,
Did into France or colder Denmark roam,
To ruin with worse air our staple trade. Dryden.

2. Wet; moist; watery.

I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd
From the spungy south to this part of the west,
There vanish'd in the sun-beams. Shakspeare.

3. Having the quality of imbibing.

SPU

There is no lady of more softer bowels,
More spungy to suck in the sense of fear. Shaksp.
SPUNK. n. f. Rotten wood; touchwood.
See SPONK.

To make white powder, the best way is by the powder of rotten willows: spunk, or touchwood prepared, might perhaps make it ruflet. Brown.

SPUR. n. f. [rpuna, Saxon; spore, Danish, Islandick, and Dutch; esperon, French.]

1. A sharp point fixed in the rider's heel, with which he pricks his horse to drive him forward.

He borrowing that homely armour for want of a better, had come upon the spur to redeem Philoclea's picture. Sidney.

Whe her the body politick be
A horse whereon the governour doth ride,
Who, newly in the seat, that it may know
He can command it, lets it straight feel the spur.
Shaksp.

He presently set spurs to his horse, and departed with the rest of the company. Knolles.

Was I for this intitled Sir,
And girt with rusty sword and spur,
For fame and honour to wage battle? Hudibras.

2. Incitement; instigation. It is used with to before the effect. Dryden has used it with of; but, if he speaks properly, he means to make the following word personal.

Seeing then that nothing can move, unless there be some end, the desire whereof provoketh unto motion, how should that divine power of the soul, that spirit of our mind, ever stir itself into action,
unless it have also the like spur? Hooker.

What need we any spur, but our own cause,
To prick us to redress? Shaksp.

His laws are deep, and not vulgar; not made upon the spur of a particular occasion, but out of providence of the future, to make his people more and more happy. Bacon.

Reward is the spur of virtue in all good arts, all laudable attempts; and emulation, which is the other spur, will never be wanting, when particular rewards are proposed. Dryden.

The chief, if not only, spur to human industry and action, is uneasiness. Locke.

The former may be a spur to the latter, till age makes him in love with the study, without any childish bait. Cheyne.

3. A stimulus; a prick; any thing that galls and teases.

Grief and patience, rooted in him both,
Mingle their spurs together. Shaksp.

4. The sharp points on the legs of a cock with which he fights.

Of birds the bill is of like matter with the teeth:
as for their spur, it is but a nail. Bacon.

Animals have natural weapons to defend and offend; some talons, some claws, some spurs and beaks. Ray

5. Any thing standing out; a snag.

1. To prick with the spur; to drive with the spur.

My friend, who always takes care to cure his horse of starting fits, spurred him up to the very side of the coach. Addison.

Your father, when he mounted,
Rein'd 'em in strongly, and he spurr'd them hard.
Dryden.

Who would be at the trouble of learning, when he finds his ignorance is carested? But when you brow-beat and maul them, you make them men; for though they have no natural mettle; yet, if they are spurred and kicked, they will mend their pace. Collier.

2. To instigate; to incite; to urge forward.

Lovers break not hours,
Unless it be to come before their time:
So much they spur their expedition. Shaksp.
Let the awe he has got upon their minds be so

SPU

tempered with the marks of good-will, that affection may spur them to their duty. Locke.

3. To drive by force.

Love will not be spurr'd to what it loaths.
Shaksp.

To SPUR. v. n.

And, spurring from the fight, confess their fear:
A double wreath shall crown our Cæsar's brows.
Dryden.

2. To press forward.

Africanus took th' alarm, while yet he led,
And, spurring on, his equals soon o'erpass. Dryden.
Some bold men, though they begin with infinite ignorance and error, yet, by spurring on, refine themselves. Grew.

SPUR'GALLED. adj. [spur and gall.] Hurt with the spur.

I was not made a horse,
And yet I bear a burthen like an ass,
Spurgall'd and tir'd by jaunting Bolingbroke.
Shaksp.

What! shall each spurgall'd hackney of the day,
Or each new-pension'd sycophant, pretend
To break my windows, if I treat a friend? Pope.

SPURGE. n. f. [espurge, Fr. spurgie, Dut.
from purgo, Lat.] A plant violently purgative. Spurge is a general name in English for all milky purgative plants.

Skinner.
Every part of the plant abounds with a milky juice. There are seventy-one species of this plant, of which wartwort is one. Broad-leaved spurge is a biennial plant, and used in medicine under the name of cataputia minor. The milky juice in these plants is used by some to destroy warts; but particular care should be taken in the application, because it is a strong caustick. Miller.

That the leaves of cataputia, or spurge, being plucked upwards or downwards, perform their operations by purge or vomit, is a strange conceit, ascribing unto plants positional operations. Brown.

from me with my foot. SpeEtator.

A milk-white bull shall at your altar stand,
That threatens a fight, and spurns the rising sand.
Pope.

When Athens sinks by fates unjust,
When wild barbarians spurn her dust. Pope.

Now they, who reach Parnassus' lofty crown,
Employ their pains to spurn some others down.
Pope.

2. To reject; to scorn; to put away with contempt; to disdain.

In wisdom I should ask your name;
But since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,
What safe and nicely I might well delay,
By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn. Shaksp.

3. To treat with contempt.

Domesticks will pay a more chearful service, when they find themselves not spurned because fortune has laid them at their masters feet. Locke.

The squat consists of tin ore and spar incorporated. Woodward.

To SQUEAK. v. n. [sqwaka, Swedish.]

4 Q

SQU

1. To set up a sudden dolorous cry; to cry out with pain.

2. To cry with a shrill acute tone.

The sheeted dead
Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets. Shakspeare.
Cart wheels squeak not when they are liquored. Bacon.

I see the new Arion sail,
The lute still trembling underneath thy nail:
At thy well sharpen'd thumb from shore to shore,
The trebles squeak for fear, the bawls roar. Dryden.
Blunderbusses, planted in every loop-hole, go off at the squeaking of a fiddle, and the thrumming of a guitar. Dryden.

Who can endure to hear one of the rough old
Romans squeaking through the mouth of an eunuch?
Addison.

How like brutes organs are to ours:
They grant, if higher powers think fit,
A bear might soon be made a wit;
And that, for any thing in nature,
Pigs might squeak love-odes, dogs bark satire. Prior.

In florid impotence he speaks,
And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks. Pope.

Zoilus calls the companions of Ulysses the squeaking pigs of Homer. Pope.

3. To break silence or secrecy for fear or pain.

If he be obstinate, put a civil question to him upon the rack, and he squeaks, I warrant him. Dryden.

SQUEAK. n. f. [from the verb.] A shrill quick cry; a cry of pain.

Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,
In panick horror of pursuing dogs:
With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak,
Poor swine! as if their pretty hearts would break. Dryden.

To SQUEAL. v. n. [squala, Swedish.] To cry with a shrill sharp voice; to cry with pain. Squeak seems a short sudden cry, and squeal a cry continued.

SQUEAMISH. adj. [for quarumish or qualmish, from qualm.] Nice; fastidious; easily disgusted; having the stomach easily turned; being apt to take offence without much reason. It is used always in dislike either real or ironical.

Yet, for countenance sake, he seemed very squeamish in respect of the charge he had of the princess Pamela. Sidney.

Quoth he, that honour's very squeamish,
That takes a bawling for a blemish;
For what's more honourable than scars,
Or skin to tatters rent in wars? Hudibras.

His muse is rustick, and perhaps too plain
The men of squeamish taste to entertain. Southern.
It is rare to see a man at once squeamish and voracious. South.

There is no occasion to oppose the ancients and the moderns, or to be squeamish on either side. He that wisely conducts his mind in the pursuit of knowledge, will gather what lights he can from either. Locke.

SQUEAMISHLY. adv. [from squeamish.] In a fastidious manner.

SQUEAMISHNESS. n. f. [from squeamish.] Niceness; delicacy; fastidiousness.

The thorough-paced politician must laugh at the squeamishness of his conscience, and read it another lecture. South.

Upon their principles they may revive the worship of the host of heaven; it is but conquering a little squeamishness of stomach. Stillingfleet.

To administer this dose, fifty thousand operators, considering the squeamishness of some stomachs, and the peevishness of young children, is but reasonable. Swift.

To SQUEEZE. v. a. [sqizan, Saxon; ys-gwasgu, Welsh.]

1. To press; to crush between two bodies. It is applied to the squeezing or pressing of things downwards, as in the presses for printing. Wilkins.

SQU

The sinking of the earth would make a convulsion of the air, and that crack must so shake or squeeze the atmosphere, as to bring down all the remaining vapours. Burnet.

He reap'd the product of his labour'd ground,
And squeez'd the combs with golden liquor crown'd. Dryden.

None acted mournings forc'd to show,
Or squeeze his eyes to make the torrent flow. Dryden.

When Florio speaks, what virgin could withstand,
If gentle Damon did not squeeze her hand? Pope.

In a civil war people must expect to be crushed and squeezed toward the burden. L'Estrange.

3. To force between close bodies.

To SQUEEZE. v. n.

1. To act or pass, in consequence of compression.

A concave sphere of gold filled with water and soldered up, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops, like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold. Newton.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on poets, in a raging vein,
Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain. Pope.

2. To force way through close bodies.

Many a public minister comes empty in; but when he has crammed his guts, he is fain to squeeze hard before he can get off. L'Estrange.

SQUEEZE. n. f. [from the verb.] Compression; pressure.

A subtle artist stands with wond'rous bag,
That bears imprison'd winds, of gentler sort
Than those that erst Laertes' son enclos'd:
Peaceful they sleep; but let the tuneful squeeze
Of lab'ring elbow rouse them, out they fly
Melodious, and with spritely accents charm. Philips.

SQUELCH. n. f. Heavy fall. A low ludicrous word.

He tore the earth which he had sav'd
From squelch of knight, and storm'd and rav'd. Hudibras.

So soon as the poor devil had recovered the squelch, away he scampers, bawling like mad. L'Estrange.

SQUIB. n. f. [schieben, German, to push forward.] This etymology, though the best that I have found, is not very probable.]

1. A small pipe of paper filled with wild-fire. Used in sport.

The armada at Calais, sir Walter Raleigh was wont prettily to say, were suddenly driven away with squibs; for it was no more than a stratagem of fire-boats manless, and sent upon them. Bacon.

The forest of the south compareth the French valour to a squib, or fire of flax, which burns and crackles for a time, but suddenly extinguishes. Howel.

Lampoons, like squibs, may make a present blaze;

But time, and thunder, pay respect to bays. Waller.
Furious he begins his march,
Drives rattling o'er a brazen arch;
With squibs and crackers arm'd, to throw
Among the trembling crowd below. Swift.

Criticks on verse, as squibs on triumphs wait,
Proclaim the glory, and augment the state. Young.

2. A petty fellow. Not in use.

Asked for their pass by every squib,
That list at will them to revile or snub. Spenser.
The squibs, in the common phrase, are called libellers. Tatler.

SQUILL. n. f. [squilla, scilla, Lat. squille, French.]

1. A plant. It hath a large acrid bulbous root, like an onion; the leaves are broad; the flowers are like those of ornithogalum, or the starry hyacinth: they grow in a long spike, and come out before the leaves. Miller.

Seed or kernels of apples and pears, put into a squill, which is like a great onion, will come up earlier than in the earth itself. Bacon.

'Twill down like oxymel of squills. Roscommon.
The self-same atoms

Can, in the truffle, furnish out a feast;
And nauseate, in the scaly squill, the taste. Garth.

2. A fish.

3. An insect.

The squill insect is so called from some similitude to the squill fish, in having a long body covered with a crust, composed of several rings: the head broad and squat. Grew.

SQUINANCY. n. f. [squinance, squinancie, Fr. squinantia, Ital.] An inflammation in the throat; a quinsy.

Used for squinancies and inflammations of the throat; it seemeth to have a mollifying and lenifying virtue. Bacon.

In a squinancy there is danger of suffocation. Wifeman.

SQUINT. adj. [squinte, Dutch, oblique, transverse.] Looking obliquely; looking not directly; looking suspiciously.

Where an equal poise of hope and fear Does arbitrate the event, my nature is That I incline to hope rather than fear,
And gladly banish squint suspicion. Milton.

To SQUINT. v. n. To look obliquely; to look not in a direct line of vision.

Some can squint when they will; and children set upon a table, with a candle behind them, both eyes will move outwards, to see the light, and so induce squinting. Bacon.

Not a period of this epistle but squints towards another over against it. Pope.

To SQUINT. v. a.

1. To form the eye to oblique vision.

This is the foul Flibertigibbet; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hair-lip. Shakspeare.

2. To turn the eye obliquely.

Perkin began already to squint one eye upon the crown, and another upon the sanctuary. Bacon.

SQUINTEYED. adj. [squint and eye.]

1. Having the sight directed oblique.

He was so squinteyed, that he seemed spitefully to look upon them whom he beheld. Kneller.

2. Indirect; oblique; malignant.

This is such a false and squinteyed praise,
Which seeming to look upwards on his glories,
Looks down upon my fears. Denham.

SQUINTIFEGO. adj. Squinting. A cant word.

The timbrel and the squintifego maid
Of Isis awe thee; lest the gods, for sin,
Should with a swelling dropsy stuff thy skin. Dryden.

To SQUINNY. v. n. To look asquint. A cant word.

I remember thine eyes well enough:
Dost thou squiny at me? Shakspeare.

SQUIRE. n. f. [contraction of esquire; escuyer, Fr.] See ESQUIRE.

1. A gentleman next in rank to a knight.

He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.—Ay, that I will, come cut and long tail under the degree of a squire. Shakspeare.

The rest are princes, barons, knights, squires,
And gentlemen of blood. Shakspeare.

2. An attendant on a noble warrior.

Old Bute's form he took, Anchises' squire,
Now left to rule Ascanius. Dryden.
Knights, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage. Pope.

3. An attendant at court.

Return with her—I could as well be brought To kneel his throne, and squire-like pension beg,
To keep base life a-foot. Shakspeare.

SQUIRREL. n. f. [escurneil, Fr. sciurus, Lat.] A small animal that lives in woods, remarkable for leaping from tree to tree.

In the end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel-root,
There scatter'd by a squirrel,
Which out the kernel gotten had;
When quoth this fay, dear queen, be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
I'll set you safe from peril. Drayton.

To SQUIRT. v. a. [of uncertain etymology.] To throw out in a quick stream.

Sir Roger she mortally hated, and used to hire fellows to squirt kennel water upon him as he passed along. Arbutnot.

To SQUIRT. v. n. To let fly; to prate. Low cant.

You are so given to squirting up and down, and chattering, that the world would say, I had chosen a jack-pudding for a prime minister. L'Estrange.

SQUIRT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An instrument by which a quick stream is ejected.

He with his squirt-fire could disperse whole troops. Hudibras.

His weapons are, a pin to scratch, and a squirt to bespatter. Pope.

2. A small quick stream.

Water thole with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in danged water. Bacon.

SQUIRTER. n. s. [from squirt.] One that plies a squirt.

The squinters were at it with their kennel water, for they were mad for the loss of their bubble. Arbutnot.

To STAB. v. a. [staven, old Dutch.]

1. To pierce with a pointed weapon.

Hear the lamentations of poor Anne,
Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son;
Stabb'd by the self-same hand that made these wounds. Shakspeare.

Porcius, think thou seest thy dying brother
Stabb'd at his heart, and all besmear'd with blood, Storming at thee! Addison.

2. To wound mortally or mischievously.

What tears will then be shed!
Then, to complete her woes, will I espouse Hermione: 'twill stab her to the heart! A. Phillips.

To STAB. v. n.

1. To give a wound with a pointed weapon.

None shall dare
With shorten'd sword to stab in closer war,
But in fair combat fight. Dryden.

Killing a man with a sword or a hatchet, are looked on as no distinct species of action; but if the point of the sword first enter the body, it passes for a distinct species where it has a distinct name; as in England, where it is called stabbing. Locke.

2. To offer a stab.

Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts,
Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at my frail life. Shakspeare.

3. To give a mortal wound.

He speaks poinards, and every word stabs. Shakspeare.

STAB. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A wound with a sharp-pointed weapon.

The elements
Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well Wound the loud winds, or with bemockt at stabs Kill the still closing waters. Shakspeare.

Unworthy was thy fate, thou first of warriors,
To fall beneath a base assassin's stab. Roscoe.

2. A dark injury; a sly mischief.

3. A stroke; a blow.

He had a scripture ready to repel them all; every pertinent text urged home being a direct stab to a temptation. Sentib.

STABILITY. n. s. [stabilité, Fr. from stabilitas, Lat.]

1. Stableness; steadiness; strength to stand.

By the same degrees that either of these happen, the stability of the figure is by the same lessened. Temple.

These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,
These ribs robust and vast in order join'd,
Such strength and such stability impart,
That storms above, and earthquakes under ground,
Break not the pillars. Blackmore.

He began to try
This and that hanging stone's stability. Cotton.

2. Fixedness; not fluidity.

Since fluidness and stability are contrary qualities, we may conceive that the firmness or stability of a body consists in this, that the particles which compose it do so rest, or are intangled, that there is among them a mutual cohesion. Boyle.

3. Firmness of resolution.

STABLE. adj. [stable, Fr. stabilis, Lat.]

1. Fixed; able to stand.

2. Steady; constant; fixed in resolution or conduct.

If man would be invariable,
He must be like a rock, or stone, or tree;
For ev'n the perfect angels were not stable,
But had a fall more desperate than we. Davies.
He perfect, stable; but imperfect we,
Subject to change. Dryden.

3. Strong; fixed in state or condition; durable.

This region of chance and vanity, where nothing is stable, nothing equal; nothing could be offered to-day but what to-morrow might deprive us of. Rogers.

If the gentleman hath lain a night, get the stablemen and the scullion to stand in his way. Swift.

I would with jockeys from Newmarket dine,
And to rough riders give my choicest wine;
I would carefs some stableman of note,
And imitate his language and his coat. Bramston.

STABLENESS. n. s. [from stable.]

1. Power to stand.

2. Steadiness; constancy; stability.

The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stability,
Bounty, perfev'rance, I have no relish of them. Shakspeare.

STABLESTAND. n. s. [In law.] Is one of the four evidences or presumptions, whereby a man is convinced to intend the stealing of the king's deer in the forest: and this is when a man is found at his standing in the forest, with a cross bow bent, ready to shoot at any deer; or with a long bow; or else standing close by a tree with greyhounds in a leash ready to slip. Cowell.

I'll keep my stablestand where I lodge my wife;
I'll go in couples with her. Shakspeare.

To STABLISH. v. a. [establi, Fr. stabilis, Lat.] To establish; to fix; to settle.

STA'GGARD. n. f. [from stag.] A four year old stag.

Ainsworth.

To STA'GGER. v. n. [aggeren, Dutch.]

1. To reel; not to stand or walk steadily.

He began to appear sick and giddy, and to stagger; after which he fell down as dead.

Boyle.

He struck with all his might

Full on the helmet of th' unwary knight:

Deep was the wound; he stagger'd with the blow.

Dryden.

Then revelling the Tentyrites invade, By giddy heads and staggering legs betray'd.

The immediate forerunners of an apoplexy are a vertigo, staggering, and loss of memory.

Arbutnot.

2. To faint; to begin to give way.

The enemy staggers; if you follow your blow, he falls at your feet; but if you allow him respite, he will recover his strength.

Addison.

3. To hesitate; to fall into doubt; to become less confident or determined.

A man may, if he were fearful, stagger in this attempt.

Shakspeare.

He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith.

Romans.

Three means to fortify belief are experience, reason, and authority: of these the most potent is authority; for belief upon reason, or experience, will stagger.

Bacon.

No hereticks desire to spread

Their light opinions like these Epicures;

For so their stagg'ring thoughts are comforted,

And other men's assent their doubt assures.

Davies.

If thou confidently depend on the truth of this, without any doubting or staggering, this will be accepted by God.

Hammond.

But let it inward sink and drown my mind:

Falsehood shall want its triumph: I begin

To stagger; but I'll prop myself within.

Dryden.

To STA'GGER. v. a.

1. To make to stagger; to make to reel.

That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire,

That staggers thus my person.

Shakspeare.

2. To shock; to alarm; to make less steady or confident.

The question did at first so stagger me,

Bearing a state of mighty moment in 't.

Shakspeare.

Whosoever will read the story of this war, will find himself much staggered, and put to a kind of riddle.

Howel.

When a prince fails in honour and justice, 'tis enough to stagger his people in their allegiance.

L'Estrange.

The shells being lodged with the belemites, felenites, and other like natural fossils, it was enough to stagger a spectator, and make him ready to entertain a belief that these were so too.

Woodward.

STA'GGERS. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of horse apoplexy.

His horse past cure of the fives, stark spoil'd with the staggers.

Shakspeare.

2. Madness; wild conduct; irregular behaviour. Out of use.

I will throw thee from my care for ever

Into the staggers, and the careless lapse

Of youth and ignorance.

Shakspeare.

STA'GNANCY. n. f. [from stagnant.] The state of being without motion or ventilation.

STA'GNANT. adj. [stagnans, Lat.] Motionless; still; not agitated; not flowing; not running.

What does the flood from putrefaction keep?
Should it be stagnant in its ample seat,
The sun would through it spread destructive heat.

Blackmore.

'Twas owing to this hurry and action of the water, that the sand now was cast into layers, and not to a regular settlement, from a water quiet and stagnant.

Woodward.

Immur'd and buried in perpetual sloth,
That gloomy slumber of the stagnant soul. Irene.

STA'GNATE. v. n. [stagnum, Lat.]
To lie motionless; to have no course or stream.

The water which now arises must have all stagnated at the surface, and could never possibly have been refunded forth upon the earth, had not the strata been thus raised up. Woodward.

The aliment moving through the capillary tubes stagnates, and unites itself to the vessel through which it flows. Arbutnot.

Where creeping waters ooze,
Where marshes stagnate.

Thomson.

STAGNA'TION. n. f. [from stagnate.]

Stop of course; cessation of motion. It is often applied figuratively to moral or civil images.

As the Alps surround Geneva on all sides, they form a vast basin, where there would be a constant stagnation of vapours, did not the north wind scatter them from time to time. Addison.

To what great ends subservient is the wind!
Behold, where'er this active vapour flies,
It drives the clouds, and agitates the skies:
This from stagnation and corruption saves
Th' aerial ocean's ever-rolling waves. Blackmore.

STAID. part. adj. [from stay.] Sober; grave; regular; composed; not wild;
not volatile.

Put thyself

Into a 'haviour of less fear, ere wildness
Vanquish my *staid*er senses. Shakspeare.

This seems to our weaker view,
O'erlaid with black, staid wisdom's hue. Milton.

I should not be a persuader to them of studying much in the spring, after three years that they have well laid their grounds; but to ride out, with prudent and staid guides, to all the quarters of the land.

Milton.

I am the more at ease in fir Roger's family, because it consists of sober and staid persons. Addison.

STAIDNESS. n. f. [from staid.] Sobriety; gravity; regularity; contrariety to wildness.

The boiling blood of youth, fiercely agitating the fluid air, hinders that serenity and fixed staidness which is necessary to so severe an intentness.

Glanville.

If sometimes he appears too gay, yet a secret gracefulness of youth accompanies his writings, though the staidness and sobriety of age be wanting.

Dryden.

TO STAIN. v. a. [ystaenio, Welsh, from ys and taenu.]

Rhag Gwyar or Gnawd.

Afar ystaenawd. Taliessyn, an old British poet.]

1. To blot; to spot; to maculate.

Lend me a looking-glass;

If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then she lives. Shakspeare.

From the gash a stream

His armour stain'd, ere while so bright. Milton.

Embrace again, my sons: be foes no more,
Nor stain your country with your children's gore.

Dryden.

2. To die; to tinge.

3. To disgrace; to spot with guilt or infamy.

Of honour void, of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd.

Milton.

STAIN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Blot; spot; discoloration.

We nowhere meet with a more pleasing show than what appears in the heavens at the rising and setting of the sun, which is wholly made up of those different stains of light that shew themselves in clouds of a different situation. Dryden.

Swift trouts, diversified with crimson stains;
And pikes, the tyrants of the wat'ry plains. Pope.

2. Taint of guilt or infamy.

Nor death itself can wholly wash their stains,
But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains:
The reliques of inveterate vice they wear,
And spots of sin. Dryden.

To solemn actions of royalty and justice, their suitable ornaments are a beauty: are they only in religion a stain? Hooker.

Our opinion, concerning the force and virtue which such places have, is, I trust, without any blemish or stain of heresy. Hooker.

Then heav'n and earth, renew'd, shall be made pure

To sanctity, that shall receive no stain. Milton.

Ulysses bids his friends to cast lots; for if he had made the choice himself, they whom he had rejected might have judged it a stain upon them for want of merit. Broome.

3. Cause of reproach; shame.

Hereby I will lead her that is the praise, and yet
the stain, of all womankind. Sidney.

STAINER. n. f. [from stain.] One who stains; one who blots; one that dies; a dier.

STAINLESS. adj. [from stain.]

1. Free from blots or spots. Not in use.

The phoenix wings are not so rare
For faultless length and stainless hue. Sidney.

2. Free from sin or reproach.

I cannot love him;

Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,
Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth. Shaksp.

STAIR. n. f. [stægen, Saxon; steghe, Dutch.] Steps by which we ascend from the lower part of a building to the upper.
Stair was anciently used for the whole order of steps; but stair now, if it be used at all, signifies, as in Milton, only one flight of steps.

A good builder to a high tower will not make his stair upright, but winding almost the full compass about, that the steepness be the more insensible.

Sidney.

How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars! Shaksp.

Slaver with lips as common as the stairs.

That mount the capitol. Shakspeare.

I would have one only goodly room above stairs, of some forty foot high. Bacon.

Sir James Tirrel repairing to the Tower by night, attended by two servants, stood at the stair-foot, and sent these two villains to execute the murder. Bacon.

The stairs were such as whereon Jacob saw Angels ascending and descending. Milton.

Satan now on the lower stair,
That scal'd by steps of gold to heaven gate,
Looks down with wonder at the sudden view
Of all this world. Milton.

Trembling he springs,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings;
Nor staid for stairs, but down the depth he threw
His body; on his back the door he drew. Dryden.

STAIRCASE. n. f. [stair and case.] The part of a fabrick that contains the stairs.

To make a complete staircase is a curious piece of architecture. Wotton.

I cannot forbear mentioning a staircase, where the easiness of the ascent, the disposition of the lights, and the convenient landing, are admirably contrived.

Addison.

STAKE. n. f. [staca, Saxon; staeck, Dutch;
estaca, Spanish.]

1. A post or strong stick fixed in the ground.

The more I shak'd the stake which he had planted in the ground of my heart, the deeper still it sunk into it. Sidney.

His credit in the world might stand the poor town in great stead, as hitherto their ministers foreign estimation hath been the best stake in their hedge.

Hooker.

He wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead whereof sharp stakes, pluck'd out of hedges,
They pitched in the ground. Shakspeare.

In France the grapes that make the wine grow upon low vines bound to small stakes, and the raised vines in arbors make but verjuice. Bacon.

Or sharpen stakes, or head the forks, or twine
The fallow twigs to tie the straggling vine. Dryden.

2. A piece of long rough wood.

While he whirl'd in fiery circles round
The brand, a sharpen'd stake strong Dryas found,
And in the shoulder's joint inflicts the wound.

Dryden.

3. Any thing placed as a palisade or fence.

That hollow I should know: what are you?
speak:

Come not too near, you fall on iron stakes else.

Milton.

4. The post to which a beast is tied to be baited.

We are at the stake,

And bay'd about with many enemies. Shakspeare.

Have you not set mine honour at the stake,
And baited it with all th' unmuzzled thoughts
That tyrannous heart can think? Shakspeare.

5. Any thing pledged or wagered. I know not well whence it had this meaning: I suppose it is so named from being at stake, that is, in a state of hazard like an animal baited, and in hazard from which it cannot be withdrawn.

'Tis time short pleasure now to take,
Of little life the best to make,

And manage wisely the last stake. Cowley.

O then, what interest shall I make
To save my last important stake,

When the most just have cause to quake! Roscom.

He ventures little for so great a stake. More.

Th' increasing sound is borne to either shore,
And for their stakes the throwing nations fear.

Dryden.

The game was so contrived, that one particular cast took up the whole stake; and, when some others came up, you laid down. Arbutnot.

6. The state of being hazarded, pledged, or wagered.

When he heard that the lady Margaret was declared for it, he saw plainly that his kingdom must again be put to the stake, and that he must fight for it. Bacon.

Are not our liberties, our lives,
The laws, religion, and our wives,

Enough at once to lie at stake,
For cov'nant and the cause's sake? Hudibras.

The honour of the nation being in a manner at stake to make good several deficiencies. Davenant.

Of my crown thou too much care dost take;
That which I value more, my love's at stake.

Dryden.

Hath any of you a great interest at stake in a distant part of the world? Hath he ventured a good share of his fortune? Atterbury.

Every moment Cato's life's at stake. Addison.

7. The stake is a small anvil, which stands upon a small iron foot on the workbench, to remove as occasion offers; or else it hath a strong iron spike at the bottom, let into some place of the workbench, not to be removed. Its office is to set small cold work straight upon, or to cut or punch upon with the cold chissel or cold punch. Moxon.

TO STAKE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten, support, or defend with posts set upright.

Stake and bind up your weakest plants and flowers against the winds, before they in a moment prostrate a whole year's labour. Evelyn.

2. To wager; to hazard; to put to hazard.

Is a man betrayed in his nearest concerns? The cause is, he relied upon the services of a pack of villains, who designed nothing but their own game, and to stake him while they played for themselves. South.

Persons, after their prisons have been flung open, have chosen rather to languish in their dungeons than stake their miserable lives on the success of a revolution. Addison.

They durst not stake their present and future happiness on their own chimerical imaginations. Addison.

I'll stake yon' lamb that near the fountain plays, And from the brink his dancing shade surveys. Pope.

STALACTITES. n. f. [from σταλαξ.]

Spar in the shape of an icicle, accidentally formed in the perpendicular fissures of the stone. Woodward.

STALACTICAL. adj. Resembling an icicle.

STALAGMITES. n. f. Spar formed into the shape of drops. Woodward.

STALE. adj. [stelle, Dutch.]

1. Old; long kept; altered by time. Stale is not used of persons otherwise than in contempt: except when it is applied to beer, it commonly means worse for age.

This, Richard, is a curious case:
Suppose your eyes sent equal rays
Upon two distant pots of ale,
Not knowing which was mild or stale;
In this sad state your doubtful choice
Would never have the casting voice. Prior.

A stale virgin sets up a shop in a place where she is not known. Spektator.

2. Used till it is of no use or esteem; worn out of regard or notice.

The duke regarded not the muttering multitude, knowing that rumours grow stale, and vanish with time. Hayward.

About her neck a packet mail,
Fraught with advice, some fresh, some stale. Butler.

Many things beget opinion; so doth novelty: wit itself, if stale, is less taking. Grew.

Pompey was a perfect favourite of the people; but his pretensions grew stale, for want of a timely opportunity of introducing them upon the stage. Swift.

They reason and conclude by precedent,
And own stale nonsense which they ne'er invent.

STALE. n. f. [from stælan, Saxon, to steal.]

1. Something exhibited or offered as an allurement to draw others to any place or purpose.

His heart being wholly delighted in deceiving us, we could never be warned; but rather one bird caught, served for a stale to bring in more. Sidney.

Still as he went he crafty stales did lay,
With cunning trains him to entrap unware;
And privy spials plac'd in all his way,
To weet what course he takes, and how he fares. Spenser.

The trumpery in my house bring hither,
For stale to catch these thieves. Shakspeare.

Had he none else to make a stale but me?
I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown,
And I'll be chief to bring him down again. Shakspeare.

A pretence of kindness is the universal stale to all base projects: by this men are robbed of their fortunes, and women of their honour.

Government of the Tongue.

It may be a vizor for the hypocrite, and a stale for the ambitious. Decay of Piety.

This easy fool must be my stale, set up
To catch the people's eyes: he's tame and merciful;
Him I can manage. Dryden.

2. In Shakspeare it seems to signify a prostitute.

I stand dishonour'd, that have gone about
To link my dear friend to a common stale. Shakspeare.

3. [from stale, adj.] Urine; old urine.

4. Old beer; beer somewhat acidulated.

5. [stale, Dutch, a stick.] A handle.

But, seeing th' arrow's stale without, and that the head did goe

No further than it might be seene, he call'd his spirits again. Chapman.

It hath a long stale or handle, with a button at the end for one's hand. Mortimer.

To STALE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

To wear out; to make old. Not in use.

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale Her infinite variety. Shakspeare.

Were I a common laughter, or did use To stale with ordinary oaths my love

To every new protestor. Shakspeare.

A barren-spirited fellow, one that feeds On abject orts and imitations;

Which, out of use, and stal'd by other men, Begin his fashion. Shakspeare.

To STALE. v. n. [from the noun.] To make water.

Having tied his beast t' a pale, And taken time for both to stale. Hudibras.

STALELY. adv. [from stale.] Of old; of long time.

STALENESS. n. f. [from stale.] Oldness; state of being long kept; state of being corrupted by time.

The beer and wine, as well within water as above, have not been palled; but somewhat better than bottles of the same drinks and staleness, kept in a cellar. Bacon.

Provided our landlord's principles were sound, we did not take any notice of the staleness of his provisions. Addison.

To STALK. v. n. [stælc, Saxon.]

1. To walk with high and superb steps. It is used commonly in a sense of dislike.

His monstrous enemy With sturdy steps came stalking in his sight. Spenser.

Shall your city call us lord, In that behalf by which we challeng'd it?

Or shall we give the signal to our rage, And stalk in blood to our possession? Shakspeare.

Unfold th' eternal door: You see before the gate what stalking ghost

Commands the guards, what sentries keep the post. Dryden.

With manly mien he stalk'd along the ground; Nor wonted voice bely'd nor vaunting sound. Dryden.

Then stalking through the deep He fords the ocean, while the topmost wave

Scarce reaches up his middle side. Addison.

Vexatious thought still found my flying mind, Nor bound by limits, nor to place confin'd;

Haunted my nights, and terrified my days, Stalk'd through my gardens, and pursued my ways,

Nor shut from artful bow'r, nor lost in winding maze. Prior.

Scornful turning from the shore My haughty step, I stalk'd the valley o'er. Pope.

2. It is often used with some insinuation of contempt or abhorrence.

Bertran

Stalks close behind her, like a witch's fiend Pressing to be employ'd. Dryden.

They pass their precious hours in plays and sports, Till death behind came stalking on unseen. Dryden.

'Tis not to stalk about, and draw fresh air From time to time. Addison.

3. To walk behind a stalking horse or cover.

The king asked how far it was to a certain town: they said six miles. Half an hour after he asked again: one said six miles and a half. The king alighted out of his coach, and crept under the shoulder of his led horse: and when some asked his majesty what he meant, I must stalk, said he; for yonder town is shy, and flies me. Bacon.

STALK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. High, proud, wide, and stately step.

Behind it forth there leapt An ugly fiend, more foul than dismal day;

The which with monstrous stalk behind him stept, And ever as he went due watch upon him kept. Spenser.

Great Milton next, with high and haughty stalks, Unfetter'd in majestic numbers walks. Addison.

2. [stale, Dutch.] The stem on which flowers or fruits grow.

A stock-gillyflower, gently tied on a stick, put into a steep glass full of quicksilver, so that the quicksilver cover it: after five days you will find the flower fresh, and the stalk harder and less flexible than it was. Bacon.

Small store will serve, where store, All seasons, ripe for use hangs on the stalk. Milton.

That amber attracts not basil, is wholly repugnant unto truth; for if the leaves thereof, or dried stalks, be stripped unto small straws, they arise unto amber, wax, and other electrics, no otherways than those of wheat and rye. Brown.

Roses unbud, and ev'ry fragrant flow'r, Flew from their stalks to strew thy nuptial bow'r. Dryden.

3. The stem of a quill.

tida, have been put into a great scouring by the vapour only. Bacon.
 3. [estamper, Fr. stampare, Ital. estamper, Spanish.] To impress with some mark or figure.
Height of place is intended only to stamp the endowments of a private condition with lustre and authority. South.
Here swells the shelf with Ogilby the great;
There, stamp'd with arms, Newcastle shines complete. Pope.
 4. To fix a mark by impressing it.
Out of mere ambition, you have made
Your holy hat be stamp'd on the king's coin. Shakspeare.
These prodigious conceits in nature spring out of framing abstracted conceptions, instead of those easy and primary notions which nature stamps in all men of common sense. Digby.
There needs no positive law or sanction of God to stamp an obliquity upon such a disobedience. South.
No constant reason of this can be given, but from the nature of man's mind, which hath this notion of a deity born with it, and stamped upon it; or is of such a frame, that in the free use of itself it will find out God. Tillotson.
Though God has given us no innate ideas of himself; though he has stamp'd no original characters on our minds, wherein we may read his being; yet, having furnished us with those faculties our minds are endowed with, he hath not left himself without witness. Locke.
What titles had they had, if nature had not Strove hard to thrust the worst deserving first,
And stamp'd the noble mark of eldership
Upon their baser metal? Rowe.
What an unspeakable happiness would it be to a man engaged in the pursuit of knowledge, if he had but a power of stamping his best sentiments upon his memory in indelible characters. Watts.
 5. To make by impressing a mark.
If two pennyweight of silver, marked with a certain impression, shall here in England be equivalent to three pennyweight marked with another impression, they will not fail to stamp pieces of that fashion, and quickly carry away your silver. Locke.
 6. To mint; to form; to coin.
We are bastards all;
And that most venerable man, which I

STA

- Did call my father, was I know not where
When I was stamp'd. Shakspeare.
- To STAMP. v. n. To strike the foot suddenly downward.
What a fool art thou,
A ramping fool, to brag, to stamp, and swear,
Upon my party! Thou cold blooded slave,
Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side?
Shakspeare.
The men shall howl at the noise of the stamping of the hoofs of his strong horses. Jeremiab.
There is such an echo among the old ruins and vaults, that, if you stamp but a little louder than ordinary, you hear the sound repeated. Addison.
He cannot bear th' astonishing delight,
But starts, exclaims, and stamps, and raves, and dies.
Dennis.
They got to the top, which was flat and even,
and stamping upon it, they found it was hollow.
Swift.
- STAMP. n. s. [estampe, Fr. stampa, Ital.]
1. Any instrument by which a distinct and lasting impression is made.
Some other nymphs, with colours faint
And pencil flow, may Cupid paint,
And a weak heart in time destroy:
She has a stamp, and prints the boy. Waller.
'Tis gold so pure,
It cannot bear the stamp without allay. Dryden.
 2. A mark set on any thing; impression.
But to the pure refined ore
The stamp of kings imparts no more Worth, than the metal held before. Carew.
That sacred name gives ornament and grace,
And, like his stamp, makes basest metals pass:
'Twere folly now a stately pile to raise,
To build a playhouse, while you throw down plays.
Dryden.
Ideas are imprinted on the memory; some by an object affecting the senses only; others, that have more than once offered themselves, have yet been little taken notice of; the mind, intent only on one thing, not settling the stamp deep into itself. Locke.
 3. A thing marked or stamped.
The mere despair of surgery he cures;
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers. Shakspeare.

Did very much his genius cramp;
And since he could not spend his fire,
He now intended to retire. Swift.
 6. A character of reputation, good or bad, fixed upon any thing.
The persons here reflected upon are of such a peculiar stamp of impiety, that they seem formed into a kind of diabolical society for the finding out new experiments in vice. South.
Where reason or scripture is expressed for any opinion, we may receive it as of divine authority; but it is not the strength of our own persuasions which can give it that stamp. Locke.
 7. Authority; currency; value derived from any suffrage or attestation.
Of the same stamp is that which is obtruded upon us, that an adamant suspends the attraction of the loadstone. Brown.
The common people do not judge of vice or virtue by the morality or immorality, so much as by the stamp that is set upon it by men of figure. L'Estr.
 8. Make; cast; form.
If speaking truth
In this fine age were not thought flatt'ry,
Such attribution should this Douglas have,
As not a soldier of this season's stamp
Should go so general current through the world.
Shakspeare.
When one man of an exemplary improbity charges another of the same stamp in a court of justice, he lies under the disadvantage of a strong suspicion.
L'Estrange.

Let a friend to the government relate to him a matter of fact, he gives him the lye in every look; but if one of his own stamp should tell him that the king of Sweden would be suddenly at Perth, he hugs himself at the good news. Addison.

A king of heav'n's own stamp, not vulgar make; Blessed in giving, and averse to take. Harte.

STA'MPER. n. s. [from stamp.] An instrument of pounding.

acquaintance with God, we stand off from it, and will not be tempted to embrace it. Atterbury.
56. To stand off. To have relief; to appear protuberant or prominent.
Picture is best when it stands off, as if it were carved; and sculpture is best when it appeareth so tender as if it were painted; when there is such a softness in the limbs, as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone, but a pencil had drawn and stroked them in oil. Wotton.
57. To stand out. To hold resolution; to hold a post; not to yield a point.
King John hath reconcil'd Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in,
That so stood out against the holy church. Shakspeare.
Pomtinus knows not you,
While you stand out upon these traitorous terms. Ben Jonson.
Let not men flatter themselves, that though they find it difficult at present to combat and stand out against an ill practice, yet that old age would do that for them, which they in their youth could never find in their hearts to do for themselves. South.
Scarce can a good-natured man refuse a compliance with the solicitations of his company, and stand out against the raillery of his familiars. Rogers.
58. To stand out. Not to comply; to secede.
Thou shalt see me at Tullus' face:
What, art thou stiff? stand'st out? Shakspeare.

Vice is at stand, and at the highest flow:
Then, satire, spread thy sails; take all the winds can blow. Dryden.

In the beginning of summer the days are at a stand, with little variation of length or shortness;
because the diurnal variation of the sun partakes more of a right line than of a spiral. Dryden.

The sea, since the memory of all ages, hath continued at a stand, without considerable variation. Bentley.

7. A point beyond which one cannot proceed.

Every part of what we would,
Must make a stand at what your highness will. Shakspeare.

When sam'd Varelst this little wonder drew,
Flora vouchsaf'd the growing work to view;
Finding the painter's science at a stand,
The goddess snatch'd the pencil from his hand;
And finishing the piece, she smiling said,
Behold one work of mine that ne'er shall fade. Prior.

8. Difficulty; perplexity; embarrassment; hesitation.

A fool may so far imitate the mien of a wise man, as at first to put a body to a stand what to make of him. L'Estrange.

The well-shap'd changeling is a man, has a rational soul, though it appear not: this is past doubt. Make the ears a little longer, then you begin to boggle: make the face yet narrower, and then you are at a stand. Locke.

9. A frame or table on which vessels are placed.

Such squires are only fit for country towns,
To stink of ale, and dust a stand with clowns;
Who, to be chosen for the land's protectors,
Tope and get drunk before the wise electors. Dryden.

After supper a stand was brought in, with a brass vessel full of wine, of which he that pleased might drink; but no liquor was forced. Dryden.

Her modest eyes, abashed to behold

So many gazers as on her do stare,

Upon the lowly ground affixed are.

Their staring eyes sparkling with fervent fire,
And ugly shapes, did nigh the man dismay,
That, were it not for shame, he would retire.

Spenser.

Look not big, nor stare nor fret;

I will be master of what is mine own.

They were never satisfied with staring upon their masts, sails, cables, ropes, and tacklings.

I hear

The tread of many feet steering this way;

Perhaps my enemies, who come to stare

At my affliction, and perhaps t' insult.

A satyr, that comes staring from the woods,

Must not at first speak like an orator.

And, while he stares around with stupid eyes,

His brows with berries and his temples dyes.

What dost thou make a shipboard?

Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free,

Stark staring man, that thou shouldst tempt the sea?

Dryden.

Struggling, and wildly staring on the skies

With scarce recover'd fight.

Trembling the miscreant stood;

He star'd, and roll'd his haggard eyes around.

Break out in crackling flames to shun thy snare,

Or hiss a dragon, or a tyger stare.

Why dost thou not

Try the virtue of that gorgon face,

To stare me into statue?

I was unlook'd prevented by the presence of a bear, which, as I approached with my present, threw his eyes in my way, and stared me out of my resolution.

The wit at his elbow gave him a touch upon the shoulder, and stared him in the face with so bewitching

a grin, that the whittler relaxed his fibres.

She paid a tradesman once, to make him stare.

Gods! shall the ravisher display your hair,

While the fops envy, and the ladies stare?

Through nature and through art the rang'd,

And gracefully her subject chang'd:

In vain; her hearers had no share

In all she spoke, except to stare.

2. To STARE in the face. To be undeniably evident.

And snatch'd the starting serpents from the ground. Pope.

4. To shrink; to winch.

What trick, what starting hole, canst thou find out, to hide thee from this open shame? Shakspeare.

With trial fire touch me his finger end;
If he be chaste, the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but, if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart. Shakspeare.

5. To deviate.

The lords and gentlemen take all the meanest fort upon themselves; for they are best able to bring them in, whensoever any of them starteth out. Spenser.

Th' old drudging fun from his long-beaten way
Shall at thy voice start and misguide the day;
The jocund orbs shall break their measur'd pace,
And stubborn poles change their allotted place. Cowley.

I rank him with the prodigies of fame,
With things which start from nature's common rules,
With bearded infants, and with teeming mules. Creech.

Keep your soul to the work when ready to start aside, unless you will be a slave to every wild imagination. Watts.

6. To set out from the barrier at a race.

It seems to be rather a terminus a quo than a true principle, as the starting post is none of the horse's legs. Boyle.

Should some god tell me, that I should be born
And cry again, his offer I should scorn;
Alham'd, when I have ended well my race,
To be led back to my first starting place. Denham.

When from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race. Dryden.

The clangor of the trumpet gives the sign;
At once they start, advancing in a line. Dryden.

All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of arbitrement, and the other party during that time doth cautelously get the start and advantage at common law, yet the pretorian court will set back all things in statu quo prius. Bacon.

Doubtless some other heart

Will get the start;
And, stepping in before,
Will take possession of the sacred store
Of hidden sweets. Crashaw.

Ere the knight could do his part,
The squire had got so much the start,
H' had to the lady done his errand,
And told her all his tricks aforehand. Hudibras.

She might have forsaken him, if he had not got the start of her. Dryden.

The reason why the mathematicks and mechanick arts have so much got the start in growth of other sciences, may be resolved into this, that their progress hath not been retarded by that reverential awe of former discoverers. Glanville.

The French year has got the start of ours more in the works of nature than in the new style. Addison.

STARTER. n. s. [from start.]

Who like our active African instructs
The fiery steed, and trains him to his hand? Addison.

See the bold youth strain up the threatening steep;
Hang o'er their couriers heads with eager speed,
And earth rolls back beneath the flying steed. Pope.

Some nymphs affect a more heroic breed,
And vault from hunters to the manag'd steed. Young.

STEEL. n. f. [from stal, Sax. staal, Dutch.]

1. A kind of iron, refined and purified by the fire with other ingredients, which renders it white, and its grain closer and finer than common iron. Steel, of all other metals, is that susceptible of the greatest degree of hardness, when well tempered; whence its great use in the making of tools and instruments of all kinds. Chambers.

Steel is made from the purest and softest iron, by keeping it red hot, stratified with coal-dust and wood-ashes, or other substances that abound in the phlogiston, for several hours in a close furnace. Hill.

At her back a bow and quiver gay,
Stuff'd with steel-headed darts, wherewith she quell'd
The savage beasts in her victorious play. Spenser.

STE

With mighty bars of long-enduring brass
The steel-bound doors and iron gates he ties. Fairfax.

They are not charm'd against your points of steel nor iron fram'd. Chapman.

A looking-glass, with the steel behind, looketh whiter than glass simple. Bacon.

Diamonds, though hard bodies, will not readily strike fire with steel, much less with one another; nor a flint easily with a steel, if they both be wet; the sparks being then quenched in their irruption. Brown.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure,
As might the strokes of two such arms endure. Dryden.

2. It is often used metonymically for weapons or armour.

Brave Macbeth with his brandish'd steel,
Which smok'd with bloody execution,
Carv'd out his passage till he had fac'd the slave. Shakspeare.

Polish'd steel from far severely shines. Dryden.
He, sudden as the word,
In proud Plexippus' bosom plung'd the sword;
Toxus amaz'd, and with amazement flow,
Stood doubting; and, while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood. Dryden.

3. Chalybeate medicines.

After relaxing, steel strengthens the solids, and is likewise an antacid. Arbutnot.

4. It is used proverbially for hardness: as, heads of steel.

STEEL. adj. Made of steel.

A lance then took he, with a keene steel head,
To be his keepe off both 'gainst men and dogges. Chapman.

To STEEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To point or edge with steel.

Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point. Shakspeare.

2. To make hard or firm. It is used, if it be applied to the mind, very often in a bad sense.

Lies well steel'd with weighty arguments. Shakspeare.

So service shall with steeld fingers toil,
And labour shall refresh itself with hope. Shakspeare.

From his metal was his party steel'd;
Which, once in him rebated, all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy lead. Shakspeare.

O God of battles! steel my soldiers hearts,
Possess them not with fear. Shakspeare.

Why will you fight against so sweet a passion,
And steel your heart to such a world of charms? Addison.

Man, foolish man!
Scarce know'st thou how thyself began;
Yet, steel'd with studied boldness, thou dar'st try
To send thy doubted reason's dazzled eye
Through the mysterious gulf of vast immensity. Prior.

Let the steel'd Turk be deaf to matrons cries,
See virgins ravish'd with relentless eyes. Tickel.

So perish all whose breasts the furies steel'd,
And curs'd with hearts unknowing how to yield. Pope.

STEELY. adj. [from steel.]

1. Made of steel.

Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,
Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance. Shakspeare.

Here smokes his forge, he bares his sinewy arm,
And early strokes the founding anvil warm;
Around his shop the steely sparkles flew,
As for the steed he shap'd the bending shoe. Gay.

2. Hard; firm.

That he would unarm her noble heart of that steely resistance against the sweet blows of love. Sidney.

STEELYARD. n. f. [from steel and yard.] A kind of balance, in which the weight is moved along an iron rod, and grows heavier as it is removed further from the fulcrum.

STEEN or STEAN. n. f. A vessel of clay or stone. Ainsworth.

STEEP. adj. [steap, Sax.] Rising or descending with great inclination; precipitous.

The mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall. Ezekiel.

He now had conquer'd Anxur's steep ascent. Addison.

STEEP. n. f. Precipice; ascent or descent approaching to perpendicularity.

As that Thebean monster that propos'd
Her riddle, and him, who soly'd it not, devour'd;
That once found out and soly'd, for grief and spight
Cast herself headlong from th' Ismenian steep. Milton.

As high turrets for their airy steep
Require foundations in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lie,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.

Instructs the beast to know his native force,
To take the bit between his teeth, and fly
To the next headlong steep of anarchy. Dryden.

We had on each side naked rocks and mountains, broken into a thousand irregular steep and precipices. Addison.

Leaning o'er the rails, he musing stood,
And view'd below the black canal of mud,
Where common shores a lulling murmur keep,
Whose torrents rush from Holborn's fatal steep. Gay.

To STEEP. v. a. [stippen, Dutch.] To soak; to macerate; to imbue; to dip.

When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fast, and all his armour steep,
For very fellness loud he 'gan to weep. Spenser.

He, like an adder lurking in the weeds,
His wand'ring thought in deep desire does steep;
And his frail eye with spoil of beauty feeds. Spenser.

A napkin steeped in the harmless blood
Of sweet young Rutland. Shakspeare.

The conquering wine hath steep'd our sense
In soft and delicate Lethe. Shakspeare.

Many dream not to find, neither deserve,
And yet are steep'd in favours. Shakspeare.

Four days will quickly steep themselves in night;
Four nights will quickly dream away the time. Shakspeare.

Most of the steepings are cheap things, and the goodness of the crop is a great matter of gain. Bacon.

Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethean flood;
In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours and their irksome years. Dryden.

Wheat steeped in brine twelve hours prevents the smuttness. Mortimer.

STEE'PLE. n. f. [steopel, stypel, Sax.] A turret of a church, generally furnished with bells; a spire.

Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks; rage, blow!
You cataracts and hurricanoes, spout!
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks. Shakspeare.

What was found in many places, and preached for wheat fallen on the ground from the clouds, was but the seed of ivy-berries; and though found in steeples or high places, might be conveyed thither or muted by birds. Brown.

A raven I saw steeple-high, just over your house. L'Estrange.

They, far from steeples and their sacred sound,
In fields their sullen conventicles found. Dryden.

STEE'PLY. adv. [from steep.] With precipitous declivity.

STEE'PNES. n. f. [from steep.] Precipitous declivity.

The cragg'dness or steepness of that mountain maketh many parts of it inaccessible. Brerewood.

Lord Lovel swam over Trent on horseback, but could not recover the farther side, by reason of the steepness of the bank, and so was drowned. Bacon.

Vineyards, meadows, and corn-fields lie on the borders, and run up all the sides of the Alps, where the barrenness of the rocks, or the steepness of the ascent, will suffer them. Addison.

STEE'PY. adj. [from steep.] Having a precipitous declivity. A poetical word for steep.

Who hath dispos'd, but thou, the winding way,
Where springs down from the steepy craggs do beat? Wotton.

A prophet some, and some a poet cry,
From steepy Othrys' top to Pylus drove His herd; and for his pains enjoy'd his love. Dryden.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme. Dryden.

STEER. n. f. [steyne, steon, stione, Sax. stier, Dutch.] A young bullock.

They think themselves half exempted from law and obedience; and having once tasted freedom, do, like a steer that hath been long out of his yoke, grudge and repine ever after to come under rule again. Spenser.

Lacaon, Neptune's priest,
With solemn pomp then sacrific'd a steer. Dryden.

Nor has the steer,
At whose strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,
E'er plow'd for him. Thomson.

To STEER. v. a. [steonan, stynan, Sax. stieren, Dutch.] To direct; to guide in a passage: originally used of a ship, but applied to other things.

A comely palmer, clad in black attire,
Of ripest years, and hairs all hoary gray,
That with a staff his feeble steps did steer,
Left his long way his aged limbs should tire. Spenser.

If a pilot cannot see the pole star, it can be no fault in him to steer his course by such stars as do best appear to him. King Charles.

To STEER. v. n.

1. To direct a course at sea.
As when a ship, by skilful steersman wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sail. Milton.

In a creature, whose thoughts are more than the sands and wider than the ocean, fancy and passion must needs run him into strange courses, if reason, which is his only star and compass, be not that he steers by. Locke.

2. To conduct himself.

STEE'RAGE. n. f. [from steer.]

1. The act or practice of steering.
Having got his vessel launched and set afloat, he committed the steerage of it to such as he thought capable of conducting it. Spectator.

2. Direction; regulation of a course.
He that hath the steerage of my course,
Direct my suit. Shakspeare.

3. That by which any course is guided.
His costly frame
Inscrib'd to Phœbus, here he hung on high,
The steerage of his wings, and cut the sky. Dryden.

4. Regulation or management of any thing.
You raise the honour of the peerage,
Proud to attend you at the steerage. Swift.

5. The stern or hinder part of the ship.

STEE'RSMATE. n. f. [steer and man, or mate.] A pilot; one who steers a ship.

What pilot so expert but needs must wreck,
Embark'd with such a steersmate at the helm? Milton.

In a storm, though the vessel be pressed never so hard, a skilful steersman will yet bear up against it. L'Estrange.

Through it the joyful steersman clears his way,
And comes to anchor in his inmost bay. Dryden.

STEGANO'GRAPHIST. n. f. [steganos and graphein.] He who practices the art of secret writing. Bailey.

STEGANO'GRAPHY. n. f. [steganos and graphein.] The art of secret writing, by characters or ciphers intelligible only to the persons who correspond one with another. Bailey.

STEGNO'TICK. adj. [steganotikos.] Binding; rendering-coffive. Bailey.

STELE. n. f. [stela, Saxon; stèle, Dutch.] A stalk; a handle.

STELLAR. adj. [from stella, Latin.] Astral; relating to the stars.

In part shed down

Their stellar virtue, on all kinds that grow
On earth; made hereby apter to receive

Perfection from the sun's more potent ray. Milton.

Salt dissolved, upon fixation, returns to its affected cubes, and regular figures of minerals; as the hexagonal of chrystal, and stellar figure of the stone asteria. Glanville.

STELLATE. adj. [stellatus, Lat.] Pointed in the manner of a painted star.

One making a regulus of antimony, without iron, found his regulus adorned with a more conspicuous star than I have seen in several stellate reguluses of antimony and mars. Boyle.

STELLATION. n. f. [from stella, Latin.] Emission of light as from a star.

STELL'D. adj. Starry.
And quench'd the stelled fires. Shakspeare.

STELLI'FEROUS. adj. [stella and fero.] Having stars. Diſt.

STELLION. n. f. [stellio, Latin.] A newt. Ainsworth.

STELLIONATE. n. f. [stellionat, French; stellionatus, Latin.] A kind of crime which is committed [in law] by a deceitful selling of a thing otherwise than it really is: as, if a man should sell that for his own estate which is actually another man's.

It discerneth of crimes of stellionate, and the inchoations towards crimes capital, not actually committed. Bacon.

STEM. n. f. [stemma, Latin.]

1. The stalk; the twig.
Two lovely berries molded on one stem,
So with two seeming bodies, but one heart. Shakspeare.

After they are first shot up thirty foot in length, they spread a very large top, having no bough nor twig in the trunk or stem. Raleigh.

Set them alope a reasonable depth, and then they will put forth many roots, and so carry more shoots upon a stem. Bacon.

This, ere it was in th' earth,
God made, and ev'ry herb before it grew
On the green stem. Milton.

The stem thus threaten'd, and the sap in thee,
Drops all the branches of that noble tree. Waller.

Farewell, you flow'rs, whose buds with early care
I watch'd, and to the cheerful sun did rear:
Who now shall bind your stems? or, when you fall,
With fountain streams your fainting souls recal? Dryden.

The low'ring spring with lavish rain
Beats down the slender stem and bearded grain. Dryden.

2. Family; race; generation. Pedigrees are drawn in the form of a branching tree.

I will assay her worth to celebrate;
And so attend ye toward her glittering star,
Where ye may all, that are of noble stem, Approach. Milton.

Whoever will undertake the imperial diadem, must have of his own wherewith to support it; which is one of the reasons that it hath continued these two ages and more in that stem, now so much spoken of. Howel.

Dost thou in hounds aspire to deathless fame?
Learn well their lineage and their ancient stem. Titchel.

3. Progeny; branch of a family.

This is a *stem*Of that victorious stock, and let us fear
His native mightiness. Shakspeare.

4. [Stammen, Swedish.] The prow or forepart of a ship.

Orante's barge, ev'n in the hero's view,
From stem to stern by waves was overborn. Dryden.

To STEM. v. a. [Stemma, Islandick.] To oppose a current; to pass cross or forward notwithstanding the stream.

They on the trading flood,
Through the wide Ethiopian to the cape,
Fly, stemming nightly tow'rd the pole. Milton.

Above the deep they raise their scaly crests,
And stem the flood with their erected breasts. Denb.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untaught Indian on the stream did glide,
Ere sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
Or fin-like oars did spread from either side. Dryden.

At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
And drove those holy Vandals off the stage. Pope.

STENCH. n. f. [from stencan, Saxon.]

1. A stink; a bad smell.

Death, death, oh amiable and lovely death!
Thou odoriferous stench, sound rottenness,
Arise forth from thy couch of lasting night. Shakspeare.

So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driv'n away. Shakspeare.

Physicians, by the stench of feathers, cure the rising of the mother. Bacon.

The ministry will be found the salt of the earth, the thing that keeps societies of men from stench and corruption. South.

The hoary Nar
Corrupted with the stench of sulphur flows,
And into Tiber's stream th' infected current throws. Addison.

2. I find it used once for a good smell.

Black bulls and bearded goats on altars lie,
And clouds of sav'ry stench involve the sky. Dryden.

To STENCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make to stink. Not proper, or in use.

The foulness of the ponds only stencheth the water. Mortimer.

2. [for staunch, corruptly.] To stop; to hinder to flow.

They had better skill to let blood than stench it. King Charles.

Restringents to stench, and incrassatives to thicken,
the blood. Harvey.

STENOGRAPHY. n. f. [σενος and γραφω.]

Shorthand.

O the accurst stenography of state!
The princely eagle thrunk into a bat. Cleaveland.

STENTOROPHONICK. adj. [from Stentor, the Homeric herald, whose voice was as loud as that of fifty men, and φωνη, a voice.] Loudly speaking or sounding.

Of this stentorophonick horn of Alexander there is a figure preserved in the Vatican. Derham.

To STEP. v. n. [stæppan, Saxon; stappen, Dutch.]

1. To move by a single change of the place of the foot.

One of our nation hath proceeded so far, that he was able, by the help of wings, in a running pace, to step constantly ten yards at a time. Wilkins.

2. To advance by a sudden progression.

Whoever first, after the troubling the water, stepped in, was made whole. Josua.

Ventidius lately
Buried his father, by whose death he's stepp'd
Into a great estate. Shakspeare.

3. To move mentally.

When a person is hearing a sermon, he may give his thoughts leave to step back so far as to recollect the several heads. Watts.

They are stepping almost three thousand years back into the remotest antiquity, the only true mirror of that ancient world. Pope.

4. To go; to walk.

I am in blood

Stept in so far, that should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er. Shakspeare.

5. To come as it were by chance.

The old poets step in to the assistance of the medalist. Addison.

6. To take a short walk.

See where he comes; so, please you, step aside:
I'll know his grievance. Shakspeare.

My brothers, when they saw me wearied out,
Stepp'd, as they said, to the next thicket side
To bring me berries. Milton.

When your master wants a servant who happens to be abroad, answer, that he had but that minute stept out. Swift.

7. To walk gravely, slowly, or resolutely.

Pyrthus, the most ancient of all the bashaws, stept forth, and, appealing unto his mercies, earnestly requested him to spare his life. Knolles.

When you stepp'd forth, how did the monster rage,
In scorn of your soft looks and tender age! Corwley.

Home the swain retreats,
His flock before him stepping to the fold. Thomson.

STEP. n. f. [stæp, Saxon; stap, Dutch.]

1. Progression by one removal of the foot.

Thou found and firm-set earth,
Hear not my steps, which way they walk. Shakspeare.

Ling'ring perdition, worse than any death
Can be at once, shall step by step attend
You and your ways. Shakspeare.

Who was the first to explore th' untrodden path,
When life was hazarded in every step? Addison.

2. One remove in climbing; hold for the foot; a stair.

While Solyman lay at Buda, seven bloody heads of bishops slain in battle, were set in order upon a wooden step. Knolles.

The breadth of every single step or stair should be never less than one foot, nor more than eighteen inches. Watson.

Those heights where William's virtue might have staid,
And on the subject world look'd safely down,
By Marlbro' pass'd, the props and steps were made Sublimar yet to raise his queen's renown. Prior.

It was a saying among the ancients, Truth lies in a well; and, to carry on this metaphor, we may justly say, that logick does supply us with steps, whereby we may go down to reach the water. Watts.

3. Quantity of space passed or measured by one removal of the foot.

The gradus, a Roman measure, may be translated a step, or the half of a passus or pace. Arbutnot.

4. A small length; a small space.

There is but a step between me and death. Samuel.

5. [In the plural.] Walk; passage.

O may thy pow'r, propitious still to me,
Conduct my steps to find the fatal tree
In this deep forest. Dryden.

6. Gradation; degree.

The same sin for substance hath sundry steps and degrees, in respect whereof one man becometh a more heinous offender than another. Perkins.

7. Progression; act of advancing.

To derive two or three general principles of motion from phenomena, and afterwards to tell us how the properties and actions of all corporeal things follow from those manifest principles, would be a very great step in philosophy, though the causes of those principles were not yet discovered. Newton.

One injury is best defended by a second, and this by a third: by these steps the old masters of the palace in France became masters of the kingdom; and by these steps a general during pleasure might have grown into a general for life, and a general for life into a king. Swift.

The querist must not proceed too swiftly towards the determination of his point, that he may with more ease draw the learner to those principles step by step, from whence the final conclusion will arise. Watts.

8. Footstep; print of the foot.

From hence Astrea took her flight, and here
The prints of her departing steps appear. Dryden.

9. Gait; manner of walking.

Sudden from the golden throne

With a submissive step I halted down;
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

10. Action; instance of conduct.

The reputation of a man depends upon the first steps he makes in the world. Pope.

STEP, in composition, signifies one who is related only by marriage. [stæp, Sax. from stæpan, to deprive, or make an orphan: for the Saxons not only said a step-mother, but a step-daughter, or step-son; to which it indeed, according to this etymology, more properly belongs: but as it is now seldom applied but to the mother, it seems to mean, in the mind of those who use it, a woman who has stepped into the vacant place of the true mother.]

How should their minds chafe but misdoubt, lest this discipline, which always you match with divine doctrine as her natural and true sister, be found unto all kinds of knowledge a step-mother? Hooker.

His wanton step-dame loved him the more;
But, when she saw her offer'd sweets refuse,
Her love she turn'd to hate. Spenser.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most step-mothers,
Ill-eyed unto you. Shakspeare.

A father cruel, and a step-dame false. Shakspeare.

Cato, the elder, being aged, buried his wife, and married a young woman: his son came to him, and said, Sir, what have I offended, that you have brought a step-mother into your house? The old man answered, Nay, quite the contrary, son; thou pleasest me so well, as I would be glad to have more such. Bacon.

The name of step-dame, your practis'd art,
By which you have estrang'd my father's heart,
All you have done against me, or design,
Shows your aversion, but begets not mine. Dryden.

A step-dame too I have, a curst she,
Who rules my hen-peck'd fire, and orders me. Dryden.

Any body would have guessed misis to have been bred up under the influence of a cruel step-dame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbutnot.

STEPPINGSTONE. n. f. [step and stone.]

Stone laid to catch the foot, and save it from wet or dirt.

Like steppingstones to save a stride,
In streets where kennels are too wide. Swift.

STERCORA'CEOUS. adj. [stercoraceus, Lat.]

Belonging to dung; partaking of the nature of dung.

Green juicy vegetables, in a heap together, acquire a heat equal to that of a human body; then a putrid stercoraceous taste and odour, in taste resembling putrid flesh, and in smell human faeces. Arbutnot.

STERCORATION. n. f. [from stercora, Lat.]

The act of dunging; the act of manuring with dung.

The first help is stercoration: the sheep's dung is one of the best, and the next, dung of kine and that of horses. Bacon.

Stercoration is seasonable. K Evelyn.

The exterior pulp of the fruit serves not only for the security of the seed, whilst it hangs upon the plant, but, after it is fallen upon the earth, for the stercoration of the soil, and promotion of the growth, though not the first germination of the seminal plant. Ray.

STEREOGRAPHY. n. f. [στερος and γραφω; stereographie, French.]

The art of drawing the forms of solids upon a plane. Harris.

STEREOMETRY. n. f. [στερος and μετρον; stereometrie, French.]

The art of measuring all sorts of solid bodies. Harris.

STERIL. adj. [sterile, French; sterilis, Latin.]

Barren; unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity.

Our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chafe,
Shake off their steril curse. Shakspeare.
The sea marge steril, and rocky hard. Shakspeare.
In very steril years, corn sown will grow to another kind. Bacon.

To separate seeds, put them in water: such as are corrupted and steril swim. Brown.

She is grown steril and barren, and her births of animals are now very inconsiderable. More.

When the vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile and mineral matter, such as was inept for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

STERILITY. n. f. [sterilité, French; sterilitas, from sterilis, Latin.] Barrenness; want of fecundity; unfruitfulness.

Spain is thin sown of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil, and because their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories. Bacon.

An eternal sterility must have possessed the world, where all things had been fastened everlastingly with the adamantine chains of specific gravity, if the Almighty had not said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit. Bentley.

He had more frequent occasion for repetition than any poet; yet one cannot ascribe this to any sterility of expression, but to the genius of his times, which delighted in these reiterated verses. Pope.

To STERILIZE. v. a. [from steril.] To make barren; to deprive of fecundity, or the power of production.

May we not as well suppose the sterilizing the earth was suspended for some time, till the deluge became the executioner of it? Woodward.

Go! sterilize the fertile with thy rage. Savage.
STERLING. adj. [Of this word many derivations have been offered; the most probable of which is that offered by Camden, who derives it from the Easterlings, who were employed as coiners.]

1. An epithet by which genuine English money is discriminated.

The king's treasure, that he left at his death, amounted unto eighteen hundred thousand pounds sterling. Bacon.

Several of them would rather chuse to count out a sum in sterlings than in pounds sterling. Addison.

2. Genuine; having passed the test.

There is not one single witty phrase in this collection, which hath not received the stamp and approbation of one hundred years: he may therefore be secure to find them all genuine, sterling, and authentick. Swift.

STERLING. n. f. [sterlingum, low Latin, from the adjective.]

1. English coin; money.

This visionary various projects tries,
And knows that to be rich is to be wise:
By useful observation he can tell
The sacred charms that in true sterling dwell;
How gold makes a patrician of a slave,
A dwarf an Atlas, a Thersites brave.
Great name! which in our rolls-recorded stands,
Leads honours, and protects the learned bands,
Accept this offering to thy bounty due,
And Roman wealth in English sterling view. C. Arbuthnot.

2. Standard rate.

STERN. adj. [steynn, Saxon.]

1. Severe of countenance; truculent of aspect.

Why look you still so stern and tragical? Shakspeare.
I would outface the sternest eyes that look,
Outbrave the heart most daring on the earth,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady. Shakspeare.

It shall not be amiss here to present the stern but lively countenance of this so famous a man. Knolles.

Gods and men
Fear'd her stern frown, and she was queen o' the woods. Milton.

The judge supreme soon cast a stedfast eye,
Stern, yet attemper'd with benignity. Harte.

2. Severe of manners; harsh; unrelenting; cruel.

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou, stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shakspeare.

The common executioner,
Whose heart th' accusom'd fight of death makes hard,

Falls not the ax upon the humbled neck
But first begs pardon: will you sterner be Than he that deals and lives by bloody drops? Shakspeare.

Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious?
When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept;
Ambition should be made of sterner stuff. Shakspeare.

Then shall the war, and stern debate, and strife
Immortal, be the bus'ness of my life;
And in thy fame, the dusty spoils among,
High on the burnish'd roof my banner shall be hung. Dryden.

How, stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.

3. Hard; afflictive.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou shouldst have said, Go, porter turn the key,
All cruels else subscrib'd. Shakspeare.

Mischief stood,
And with his stern Steele drew in streamers the blood. Chapman.

STERN. n. f. [stern, Saxon: of the same original with stern.]

1. The hind part of the ship where the rudder is placed.

Let a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, as the prow and stern, the ribs, masts, ropes, and shrouds, he would form but a very lame idea of it. Watts.
They turn their heads to sea, their sterns to land. Dryden.

2. Post of management; direction.

The king from Elstam I intend to send,
And sit at chiefest stern of publick weal. Shakspeare.

3. The hinder part of any thing.

She all at once her beastly body rais'd
With doubled forces high above the ground,
Though wrapping up her wreathed stern around. Spenser.

STERNAGE. n. f. [from stern.] The steerage or stern. Not used.

Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
And leave your England as dead midnight still. Shakspeare.

STERNLY. adv. [from stern.] In a stern manner; severely; truculently.

No mountain lion tore

Two lambs so sternly. Chapman.

Sternly he pronounc'd

The rigid interdiction. Milton.

Yet sure thou art not, nor thy face, the same,

Nor thy limbs moulded in so soft a frame;

Thou look'st more sternly, dost more strongly move,

And more of awe thou bear'st, and less of love. Dryden.

STERNNESS. n. f. [from stern.]

1. Severity of look.

Of stature huge, and eke of courage bold,

That sons of men amaz'd their sternness do behold. Spenser.

How would he look, to see his work so noble

Wildly bound up! or how

Should I, in these my borrow'd flaunts, behold

The sternness of his presence! Shakspeare.

2. Severity or harshness of manners.

I have sternness in my soul enough

To hear of soldiers work. Dryden.

STERNON. n. f. [steynon.] The breastbone.

A soldier was shot in the breast through the sternon. Wifeman.

STERNUTATION. n. f. [sternutatio, Lat.]

The act of sneezing.

Sternutation is a convulsive shaking of the nerves and muscles, occasioned by an irritation of those in the nostrils. Quincy.

Concerning sternutation, or sneezing, and the custom of saluting upon that motion, it is generally believed to derive its original from a disease wherein sternutation proved mortal, and such as sneezed died. Brown.

STERNUTATIVE. adj. [sternutatif, Fr. from sternuto, Lat.] Having the quality of provoking to sneeze.

STERNUTATORY. n. f. [sternutatoire, Fr. from sternuto, Lat.] Medicine that provokes to sneeze.

Physicians, in persons near death, use sternutatories, or such medicines as provoke unto sneezing; when, if the faculty arise, and sternutation ensue, they conceive hopes of life. Brown.

STEVEN. n. f. [stæpen, Sax.] A cry, or loud clamour.

Ne sooner was out, but swifter than thought,
Fast by the hide the wolf Lowder caught;

And had not Rossy renne to the stevan,

Lowder had been slain thilke same even. Spenser.

To STEW. v. a. [estuver, Fr. stoven, Dut.]

To seeth any thing in a slow moist heat, with little water.

Ere I was risen from the place, that show'd

My duty kneeling, came a reeking post,

Stew'd in his haite, half breathless. Shakspeare.

I bruised my skin with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence, three veneys for a dish of stew'd prunes. Shakspeare.

To STEW. v. n. To be seethed in a slow moist heat.

STEW. n. f. [estuve, Fr. stufa, Ital. estufa,

Spanish.]

1. A bagnio; a hothouse.

As burning Ætna from his boiling stew

Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,

And ragged ribs of mountains molten new,

Enwrapt in coal-black clouds and filthy smoke. Spenser.

The Lydians were inhibited by Cyrus to use any armour, and give themselves to baths and stews. Abbot.

2. A brothel; a house of prostitution.

[This signification is by some imputed to this, that there were licensed brothels near the stews or fishponds in Southwark; but probably stew, like bagnio, took a bad signification from bad use.

It may be doubted whether it has any singular. South uses it in a plural termination with a singular sense. Shakspeare makes it singular.]

There be that hate harlots, and never were at the stews; that abhor falsehood, and never brake promise. Ascham.

I have seen corruption boil and bubble,

Till it o'er-run the stew. Shakspeare.

With them there are no stews, no dissolute houses, no curtesans. Bacon.

Her, though sev'n years she in the stews had laid,

A nunnery durst receive and think a maid;

And, though in childbirth's labour she did lie,

Midwives would swear 'twere but a tympany. Donne.

What mod'rate sop would rake the park or stews,

Who among troops of faultless nymphs can choose? Roscommon.

Making his own house a stew, a bordel, and a school of lewdness, to instill the rudiments of vice into the unwary flexible years of his poor children. South.

3. [stoven, Dutch, to store.] A storepond;

a small pond where fish are kept for the table.

STEWARD. n. f. [steward, Saxon.]

1. One who manages the affairs of another,

There sat, yclad in red

Down to the ground, a comely personage,

That in his hand a white rod managed;

He steward was, high diet, ripe of age,

And in demeanour sober, and in council sage. Spenser.

Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still. Shakspeare.

Take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shakspeare.
How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship, for thou mayest be no longer steward. Luke.

Improve all those talents the providence of God hath intrusted us with, because we are but stewards, and must give an account of them. Nelson.

When a steward defrauds his lord, he must connive at the rest of the servants while they are following the same practice. Swift.

What can be a greater honour, than to be chosen one of the stewards and dispensers of God's bounty to mankind? What can give a generous spirit more complacency, than to consider that great numbers owe to him, under God, their subsistence, and the good conduct of their lives. Swift.

Just steward of the bounty he receiv'd,
And dying poorer than the poor reliev'd. Harte.

2. An officer of state.
The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims
To be high steward. Shakspeare.

STEWARDSHIP. n. s. [from steward.] The office of a steward.

The earl of Worcester
Hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship. Shakspeare.

Shew us the hand of God
That hath dismiss'd us from our stewardship. Shakspeare.

If they are not employed to such purposes, we are false to our trust, and the stewardship committed to us, and shall be one day severely accountable to God for it. Calamy.

STEWAN. n. s. [from stew and pan.] A pan used for stewing.

2. The trunk into which a graft is inserted.

The cion over-ruleth the stock quite; and the stock is passive only, and giveth aliment but no motion to the graft. Bacon.

As fruits ungrateful to the planter's care,
On savage stocks inserted, learn to bear;
The surest virtues thus from passions shoot,
Wild nature's vigour working at the root. Pope.

3. A log; a post.

That they kept thy truth so pure of old,
When all our fathers worshipp'd stocks and stones, Forget not. Milton.

Why all this fury? What's the matter,
That oaks must come from Thrace to dance?
Must stupid stocks be taught to flatter?

And is there no such wood in France?

Prior.

4. A man proverbially stupid.

What tyranny is this, my heart to thrall,
And eke my tongue with proud restraint to tie,
That neither I may speak nor think at all,
But like a stupid stock in silence die?

Let the exportation of home commodities be more in value than the importation of foreign, so the stock of the kingdom shall yearly increase; for then the balance of trade must be returned in money or bullion. Bacon.

A king, against a storm, must foresee to a convenient stock of treasure. Bacon.

'Tis the place where God promises and delights to dispense larger proportions of his favour, that he may fix a mark of honour on his sanctuary, and recommend it to the sons of men, upon the stock of their own interest as well as his own glory. Soutb.

Some honour of your own acquire;
Add to that stock, which justly we bestow,
Of those blest shades to whom you all things owe.

Dryden.

Yet was she not profuse, but fear'd to waste,
And wisely manag'd that the stock might last;
That all might be supplied, and she not grieve,
When crowds appear'd, she had not to relieve;
Which to prevent, she still increas'd her store;
Laid up, and spar'd, that she might give the more.

Dryden.

Beneath one law bees live,
And with one common stock their traffick drive:
All is the state's, the state provides for all.

Dryden.

Nor do those ills on single bodies prey;
But oftner bring the nation to decay,
And sweep the present stock and future hope away.

Dryden.

If parents die without actually transferring their right to another, why does it not return to the common stock of mankind? Locke.

When we brought it out, it took such a quantity of air into its lungs, that it swelled almost twice as big as before; and it was perhaps on this stock of air that it lived a minute longer the second time.

Dried cod, so called from its hardness.

STOCKGILLYFLOWER. n. f. [leucoium, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

STOCKING. n. f. [The original word seems to be stock; whence stocks, a prison for the legs. Stock, in the old language, made the plural stocken, which was used for a pair of stocks or covers for the legs. Stocken was in time taken for a singular, and pronounced stocking. The like corruption has happened to chick, chicken, chickens.] The covering of the leg.

In his first approach before my lady he will come to her in yellow stockings, and 'tis a colour she abhors. Shakspeare.

By the loyalty of that town he procured shoes, stockings, and money for his soldiers. Clarendon.

Unless we should expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us so fit materials for clothing as the wool of sheep? Mor.

He spent half a day to look for his odd stocking, when he had them both upon a leg. L'Estrange.

At am'rous Flavio is the stocking thrown;
That very night he longs to lie alone. Pope.

The families of farmers live in filth and nastiness, without a shoe or stocking, to their feet. Swift.

To STOCKING. v. a. [from the noun.]

To drefs in stockings.

Stocking'd with loads of fat town dirt he goes.

Dryden.

STOCKJOBBER. n. f. [stock and job] A low wretch, who gets money by buying and selling shares in the funds.

The stockjobber thus from 'Change-alley goes down,

And tips you the freeman a wink;

Let me have but your vote to serve for the town,
And here is a guinea to drink. Swift.

STOCKISH. adj. [from stock.] Hard; blockish.

The poet

Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;

Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,

But musick for the time doth change his nature.

Shakspeare.

STOCKLOCK. n. f. [stock and lock.] Lock fixed in wood.

There are locks for several purposes; as street-door-locks, called stocklocks; chamber-door-locks, called spring-locks; and cupboard locks. Moxon.

STOCKS. n. f. [commonly without the singular. See STOCKING.]

1. Prison for the legs.

Fetch forth the stocks:

As I have life and honour, there shall he sit till noon.

Shakspeare.

Tom is whipt from tything to tything, stock-punished, and imprisoned. Shakspeare.

able fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments. Bentley.

STOMACH. n. f. [estomach, Fr. stoma-chus, Latin.]

1. The ventricle in which food is digested.

If you're sick at sea,
Or stomach qualm'd at land, a dram of this
Will drive away distemper. Shakspeare.
This filthy simile, this beastly line,
Quite turns my stomach. Pope.

2. Appetite; desire of food.

Tell me, what is 't that takes from thee
Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep? Shakspeare.

Will fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still in foulest letters?
She either gives a stomach, and no food;
Such are the poor in health: or else a feast,
And takes away the stomach; such the rich,
That have abundance and enjoy it not. Shakspeare.

As appetite or stomach to meet is a sign of health in the body, so is this hunger in the soul a vital quality, an evidence of some life of grace in the heart; whereas decay of appetite, and the no manner of stomach, is a most desperate prognostick. Hammond.

3. Inclination; liking.

He which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart. Shakspeare.

The unusual distance of time made it subject to every man's note, that it was an act against his stomach, and put upon him by necessity of state. Bacon.

The very trade went against his stomach. L'Estrange.

4. [Stomachus, Lat.] Anger; violence of temper.

Disdain he called was, and did disdain
To be so call'd, and who so did him call:
Stern was his look, and full of stomach vain,
His portance terrible, and stature tall. Spenser.
Is 't near dinner time? I would it were,
That you might kill your stomach on your meat,
And not upon your maid. Shakspeare.

Instead of trumpet and of drum,
That makes the warrior's stomach come. Butler.

5. Sullenness; resentment; stubbornness.

Some of the chiefest laity professed with greater stomach their judgments, that such a discipline was little better than popish tyranny disguised under a new form. Hooker.

They plainly saw, that when stomach doth strive with wit, the match is not equal. Hooker.

Whereby the ape in word'rous stomach wox,
Strongly encourag'd by the crafty fox. Spenser.

That nobles should such stomachs bear!
I myself fight not once in forty year. Shakspeare.

It stuck in the camel's stomach, that bulls should be armed with horns, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange.

Not courage, but stomach, that makes people break rather than they will bend. L'Estrange.

This sort of crying proceeding from pride, obstinacy, and stomach, the will, where the fault lies, must be bent. Locke.

6. Pride; haughtiness.

Arius, a subtle-witted and a marvellous fair-spoken man, was discontented that one should be placed before him in honour, whose superior he thought himself in desert, because through envy and stomach prone unto contradiction. Hooker.

He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking
Himself with princes. Shakspeare.

To STO'MACH. v. a. [stomachor, Latin.]

To resent; to remember with anger and malignity.

Believe not all; or, if you must believe,
Stomach not all. Shakspeare.

Jonathan loved David, and the people applauded him; only Saul stomach'd him, and therefore hated him. Hall.

The lion began to shew his teeth, and to stomach
the affront. L'Estrange.

To STO'MACH. v. n. To be angry.

Let a man, though never so justly, oppose himself unto those that are disordered in their ways, and what one amongst them commonly doth not stomach at such contradiction, storm at reproof, and hate such as would reform them? Hooker.

STO'MACHED. adj. [from stomach.] Filled with passions of resentment.

High stomach'd are they both, and full of ire;
In rage deaf as the sea, hasty as fire. Shakspeare.

STO'MACHER. n. f. [from stomach.] An ornamental covering worn by women on the breast.

Golden quoifs and stomachers,
For my lads to give their dears. Shakspeare.
Instead of a stomacher, a girding of sackcloth. Isaiah.

Thou marry'st every year
The lyric lark and the grave whispering dove,
The sparrow that neglects his life for love,
The household bird with the red stomacher. Donne.

STO'MACHFUL. adj. [stomachosus, Latin;
stomach and full.] Sullen; stubborn;
perverse.

A stomachful boy, put to school, the whole world could not bring to pronounce the first letter. L'Estrange.

Obstinate or stomachful crying should not be permitted, because it is another way of encouraging those passions which 'tis our business to subdue. Locke.

STO'MACHFULNESS. n. f. [from stomach-ful.] Stubbornness; fullness; obstinacy.

tion occasioned by an infarction and obstruction of the stomachick vessels through melancholy humours. Harvey.

By a catarrh the stomachical ferment is vitiated. Floyer.

STOMA'CHICK. n. f. [from stomach.] A medicine for the stomach.

STO'MACHLESS. adj. [stomach and less.]
Being without appetite.

STO'MACHOUS. adj. [stomachosus, Latin.]
Stout; angry; fullen; obstinate. Obsolete.

That stranger knight in presence came,
And goodly saved them; but nought again
Him answered, as courtesy became;
But with stern looks, and stomachous disdain,
Gave signs of grudge and discontentment vain. Spenser.

STOND. n. f. [for stand.]

1. Post; station. Obsolete.

On th' other side, th' assieged castle's ward
Their steadfast stonds did mightily maintain. Spenser.

2. Stop; indisposition to proceed.

There be not stonds nor restiveness in a man's nature; but the wheels of his mind keep way with the wheels of his fortune. Bacon.

Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakspeare.

With love's light wings did I o'erperch these walls;
For stony limits cannot hold love out. Shakspeare.

Nor slept the winds
Within their stony caves, but rush'd abroad
From the four hinges of the world, and fell
On the vast wilderness, whose tallest pines,
Though rooted deep as high and sturdiest oaks,
Bow'd their stiff necks, loaden with stormy blasts,
Or torn up sheer. Milton.

Here the marshy grounds approach your fields,
And there the soil a stony harvest yields. Dryden.

As in spires he stood, he turn'd to stone;
The stony snake retain'd the figure still his own.

Adam, at the news,
Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood. Milton.

STOOL. n. f. [stols, Gothick; stol, Sax.
stoel, Dutch.]

1. A seat without a back, so distinguished from a chair.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it; then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back. Watts.

Thou fearful fool,
Why takest not of the same fruit of gold?
Ne sittest down on that same silver stool,
To rest thy weary person in the shadow cold? Spenser.

Now which were wise, and which were fools?
Poor Alma sits between two stools;
The more she reads, the more perplexed. Prior.

2. Evacuation by purgative medicines.

There be medicines that move stools, and not urine; some other urine, and not stools: those that purge by stool, are such as enter not at all, or little, into the mesentery veins; but either at the first are not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts; or else are afterwards rejected by the mesentery veins, and so turn likewise downwards to the guts. Bacon.

The peristaltick motion, or repeated changes of contraction and dilatation, is not in the lower guts, else one would have a continual needing of going to stool. Arbutnot.

3. STOOL of Repentance, or Cutty Stool, in the kirks of Scotland, is somewhat analogous to the pillory. It is elevated above the congregation. In some places there may be a seat in it; but it is generally without, and the person stands therein, who has been guilty of fornication, for three Sundays, in the forenoon; and after sermon is called upon by name and surname, the beadle or kirk-officer bringing the offender, if refractory, forward to his post; and then the preacher proceeds to admonition. Here too are set to publick view adulterers; only these are habited in a coarse canvas, analogous to a hairy or monastick vest, with a hood to it, which they call the sack, or sackcloth; and that every Sunday throughout a year, or longer.

Unequal and unreasonable judgment of things brings many a great man to the stool of repentance.
L'Estrange.

STO'OLBALL. n. f. [stool and ball.] A play where balls are driven from stool to stool.

While Betty dances on the green,
And Susan is at stoolball seen. Prior.

To STOOP. v. n. [stuppen, Saxon; stuy- pen, Dutch.]

downward, and stooped toward the earth. Raleigh.

2. To lean forward standing or walking.

When Pelopidas and Ismenias were sent to Artaxerxes, Pelopidas did nothing unworthy; but Ismenias let fall his ring to the ground, and, stooping for that, was thought to make his adoration. Stillingfl.

He stooping open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib. Milton.

3. To yield; to bend; to submit.

I am the son of Henry the fifth,
Who made the dauphin and the French to stoop.
Shakspeare.

Mighty in her ships stood Carthage long,
And swept the riches of the world from far;
Yet stoop'd to Rome, less wealthy, but more strong. Dryden.

4. To descend from rank or dignity.

Where men of great wealth stoop to husbandry, it multiplieth riches exceedingly. Bacon.

He that condescended so far, and stooped so low, to invite and to bring us to heaven, will not refuse us a gracious reception there. Boyle.

5. To yield; to be inferior.

Death his death-wound shall then receive,
And stoop inglorious. Milton.

These are arts, my prince,
In which your Zama does not stoop to Rome. Addis.

6. To sink from resolution or superiority;
to condescend.

They, whose authority is required unto the satisfying of your demand, do think it both dangerous to admit such concurrence of divided minds; and unmeet that their laws, which, being once solemnly established, are to exact obedience of all men, and to constrain thereunto, should so far stoop as to hold themselves in suspense from taking any effect upon you, till some disputer can persuade you to be obedient. Hooker.

7. To come down on prey as a falcon.

The bird of Jove stoop'd from his airy tour,
Two birds of gayest plume before him drove. Milt.

8. To alight from the wing.

Satan ready now
To stoop with wearied wings and willing feet,
On the bare outside of this world. Milton.

Twelve swans behold in beauteous order move,
And stoop with closing pinions from above. Dryden.

9. To sink to a lower place.

Cow'ring low
With blandishment, each bird stoop'd on his wing.
Milton.

STOOP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Act of stooping; inclination downward.

2. Descent from dignity or superiority.

Can any loyal subject see
With patience such a stoop from sovereignty?
An ocean pour'd upon a narrow brook? Dryden.

3. Fall of a bird upon his prey.

Now will I wander through the air,
Mount, make a stoop at every fair. Waller.

An eagle made a stoop at him in the middle of his exaltation, and carried him away. L'Estrange.

4. [stoppa, Saxon; stoope, Dutch.] A vessel of liquor.

Come, lieutenant, I have a stoop of wine; and here without are a brace of gallants, that would fain have a measure to the health of Othello. Shakspeare.

There is nothing more in me, sir, but may be squeezed out without racking, only a stoop or two of wine. Denham.

A caldron of fat beef, and stoop of ale,
On the huzzaing mob shall more prevail,
Than if you give them, with the nicest art,
Ragouts of peacocks brains, or filbert tart. King.

STO'OPINGLY. adv. [from stooping.] With inclination downward.

Nani was noted to tread softly, to walk stoopingly, and raise himself from benches with laborious gesture. Watson.

To STOP. v. a. [estouper, French; stoppare, Italian; stoppen, Dutch.]

1. To hinder from progressive motion.

From the oracle

They will bring all; whose spiritual counsel had Shall stop or spur me. Shakspeare.

2. To hinder from successive operation.

Can any dresses find a way
To stop th' approaches of decay,
And mend a ruin'd face? Dorset.

3. To hinder from any change of state, whether to better or worse.

4. To hinder from action or practice.

Friend, 'tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd. Shakspeare.

As the truth of Christ is in me, no man shall stop me of this boasting. 2 Corinthians.

5. To put an end to the motion or action of any thing; to intercept.

Almon falls,
Pierc'd with an arrow from the distant war:
Fix'd in his throat the flying weapon stood,
And stopp'd his breath, and drank his vital blood. Dryden.

6. To repress; to suspend.

Every bold sinner, when about to engage in the commission of any known sin, should arrest his confidence, and stop the execution of his purpose with this question: Do I believe that God has denounced death to such a practice, or do I not? South.

7. To suppress.

He, on occasion of stopping my play, did me a good office at court, by representing it as long ago designed. Dryden.

8. To regulate musical strings with the fingers.

In instruments of strings, if you stop a string high, whereby it hath less scope to tremble, the sound is more treble, but yet more dead. Bacon.

9. To close an aperture.

Smite every fenced city, stop all wells of water, and mar land with stones. 2 Kings.

They pulled away the shoulder, and stopped their ears, that they should not hear. Zech.

A hawk's bell, the hole stopped up, hang by a thread within a bottle-glass, and stop the glass close with wax. Bacon.

His majesty stopped a leak that did much harm.
Bacon.

Stoppings and suffocations are dangerous in the body. Bacon.

They first raised an army with this design, to stop my mouth, or force my consent. King Charles.

Celsus gives a precept about bleeding, that when the blood is good, which is to be judged by the colour, that immediately the vein should be stopped.
Arbutnot.

10. To obstruct; to encumber.

Mountains of ice that stop th' imagin'd way.
Milton.

11. To garnish with proper punctuation.

To STOP. v. a.

1. To cease to go forward.

Some strange commotion
Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight
Springs out into fast gait, then stops again. Shaksp.

When men pursue their thoughts of space, they stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end. Locke.

If the rude throng pour on with furious pace,
And hap to break thee from a friend's embrace,
Stop short, nor struggle through. Gay.

2. To cease from any course of action.

Encroachments are made by degrees from one step to another; and the best time to stop is at the beginning. Leffly.

STOP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Cessation of progressive motion.

Thought's the slave of time, and life time's fool;
And time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop. Shakspeare.

The marigold, whose courtier's face
Echoes the sun, and doth unlage
Her at his rise, at his full stop
Packs and shuts up her gaudy shop. Cleveland.

A lion, ranging for his prey, made a stop on a sudden, at a hideous yelling noise, which startled him. L'Estrange.

2. Hindrance of progress; obstruction; act of stopping.

In weak and tender minds we little know what misery this strict opinion would breed, besides the stops it would make in the whole course of all men's lives and actions. Hooker.

These gates are not sufficient for the communication between the walled city and its suburbs, as daily appears by the stops and embarrasses of coaches near both these gates. Graunt.

My praise the Fabii claim,
And thou, great hero, greatest of thy name,
Ordain'd in war to save the sinking state,
And, by delays, to put a stop to fate. Dryden.

Occult qualities put a stop to the improvement of natural philosophy, and therefore have been rejected.
Newton.

Brokers hinder trade, by making the circuit which the money goes larger, and in that circuit more stops, so that the returns must necessarily be slower and scantier. Locke.

Female zeal, though proceeding from so good a principle, if we may believe the French historians, often put a stop to the proceedings of their kings, which might have ended in a reformation. Addison.

3. Repression; hindrance of operation.

'Tis a great step towards the mastery of our desires, to give this stop to them, and shut them up in silence. Locke.

4. Cessation of action.

Look you to the guard to-night:
Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop,
Not to outsport discretion. Shakspeare.

5. Interruption.

Thou art full of love and honesty,
And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them breath;
Therefore these stops of thine fright me the more. Shakspeare.

6. Prohibition of sale.

If they should open a war, they foresee the consumption France must fall into by the stop of their wine and salts, wholly taken off by our two nations.
Temple.

7. That which obstructs; obstacle; impediment.

The proud Duessa, full of wrathful spight
And fierce disdain to be affronted so, Inforc'd her purple beast with all her might,
That stop out of the way to overthrow. Spenser.

On indeed they went: but O! not far;
A fatal stop travers'd their headlong course. Daniel.

Blessed be that God who cast rubs, stops, and hindrances in my way, when I was attempting the commission of such a sin. South.

So melancholy a prospect should inspire us with zeal to oppose some stop to the rising torrent, and check this overflowing of ungodliness. Rogers.

8. Instrument by which the sounds of wind musick are regulated.

You would play upon me, you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery. Shakspeare.

Blest are those,
Whose blood and judgment are so well commingled,
That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger
To sound what stop she please. Shakspeare.

The harp
Had work, and rested not; the solemn pipe,
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milton.

The sound
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard of harp and organ; and who mov'd
Their stops, and chords, was seen; his volant touch Instinct through all proportions, low and high, Fled, and pursued transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.

A variety of strings may be observed on their harps, and of stops on their tibix; which shews the little foundation that such writers have gone upon, who,
from a short passage in a classic author, have determined the precise shape of the ancient musical instruments, with the exact number of their pipes, strings, and stops. Addison.

9. Regulation of musical chords by the fingers.

The further a string is strained, the less super-straining goeth to a note; for it requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note at all:
and in the stops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon.

10. The act of applying the stops in musick.

Th' organ-found a time surveys the stop,
Before it doth the dying note give up. Daniel.

11. A point in writing, by which sentences are distinguished.

Even the iron-pointed pen,
That notes the tragick dooms of men,
Wet with tears still'd from the eyes
Of the flinty destinies,
Would have learn'd a softer style,
And have been aham'd to spoil
His life's sweet story by the haste
Of a cruel stop ill-plac'd. Crafter.

STOPCOCK. n. f. [stop and cock.] A pipe made to let out liquor, stopped by a turning cock.

No man could spit from him without it, but would drivel like some paralytick or fool; the tongue being as a stopcock to the air, till upon its removal the spittle is driven away. Grew.

STOPPAGE. n. f. [from stop and gap.]
Something substituted; a temporary expedient.

STOPPAGE. n. f. [from stop.] The act of stopping; the state of being stopped.

The effects are a stoppage of circulation by too great a weight upon the heart, and suffocation.

The stoppage of a cough, or spitting, increases phlegm in the stomach. Floyer.

STOPPLE or Stopper. n. f. [from stop.]
That by which any hole, or the mouth of any vessel, is filled up.

Bottles swung, or carried in a wheel-barrow upon rough ground, fill not full, but leave some air; for if the liquor come close to the stopple, it cannot flower.
Bacon.

There were no shuts or stopples made for the ears, that any loud or sharp noise might awaken it, as also a soft and gentle murmur provoke it to sleep.
Ray.

STOPRAX. n. f. [styrax, Latin.]

1. A plant.

2. A resinous and odoriferous gum.

I yielded a pleasant odour like the best myrrh, as galbanum, and sweet storax. Ecclesiasticus.

STORE. n. f. [stor, in old Swedish and Runick, is much, and is prefixed to other words to intend their signification; stor, Danish; stoor, Islandick, is great. The Teutonic dialects nearer to English seem not to have retained this word.]

1. Large number; large quantity; plenty.

The ships are fraught with store of victuals, and good quantity of treasure. Bacon.

None yet, but store hereafter from the earth
Up hither like aerial vapours flew,
Of all things transitory and vain, when sin
With vanity had fill'd the works of men. Milton.

Jove grant me length of life, and years good store
Heap on my bended back. Dryden.

2. A stock accumulated; a supply hoarded.

We liv'd supine amidst our flowing store,
We slept securely, and we dreamt of more. Dryden.

Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame:
The sweet enthusiast from her sacred store
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds. Dryden.

Thee, goddess, thee, Britannia's isle adores:
How has she oft exhausted all her stores!
How oft in fields of death thy presence sought,
Nor thinks the mighty prize too dearly bought!
Addison.

Their minds are richly fraught
With philosophick stores. Thomson.

3. The state of being accumulated; hoard.
Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures? Deuteronomy.

4. Storehouse; magazine.

Sulphurous and nitrous foam,
Concocted and adusted, they reduc'd
To blackest grain, and into store convey'd. Milton.
STORE. adj. Hoarded; laid up; accumulated.

What floods of treasure have flowed into Europe
by that action, so that the cause of christendom is raised since twenty times told: of this treasure the gold was accumulate and store treasure; but the silver is still growing. Bacon.

To STORE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish; to replenish.

Wife Plato said the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.
Her face with thousand beauties blest;
Her mind with thousand virtues stor'd;
Her power with boundless joy confest,
Her person only not ador'd. Prior.

2. To stock against a future time.

Some were of opinion that it were best to stay where they were, until more aid and store of victuals were come; but others said the enemy were but barely stored with victuals, and therefore could not long hold out. Knolles.

One having stored a pond of four acres with carps, tench, and other fish, and only put in two small pikes, at seven years end, upon the draught, not one fish was left, but the two pikes grown to an excessive bigness. Hale.

The mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, which I call ideas of reflection.
Locke.

To store the vessel let the care be mine
With water from the rocks, and rosy wine,
And life-sustaining bread. Pope.

3. To lay up; to hoard.

Let the main part of the corn be a common stock, laid in and stored up, and then delivered out in proportion. Bacon.

STOREHOUSE. n. s. [store and house.]

1. Magazine; treasury; place in which things are hoarded and repositied against
a time of use.

By us it is willingly confessed, that the scripture of God is a storehouse abounding with inestimable treasures of wisdom and knowledge, in many kinds over and above things in this kind barely necessary. Hooker.

Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses cramm'd
with grain! Shakspeare.

Joseph opened all the storehouses, and sold unto
the Egyptians. Genesis.

To these high pow'rs a storehouse doth pertain,
Where they all arts and gen'ral reasons lay;
Which in the soul, ev'n after death, remain,
And no Lethæan blood can wash away. Davies.

My heart hath been a storehouse long of things
And sayings laid up, portending strange events. Mil.

The image of God was resplendent in man's practical understanding, that storehouse of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality. South.

As many different sounds as can be made by single articulations, so many letters there are in the storehouse of nature. Holder.

2. A great mass repositied.

They greatly joyed merry tales to feign,
Of which a storehouse did with her remain. F. Qu.

STORER. n. s. [from store.] One who lays up.

STORIED. adj. [from story.] Furnished with stories; adorned with historical pictures.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloister pale,
And love the high embowed roof,
With antick pillar, massy proof;
And storied windows, richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light. Milton.

Some greedy minion or imperious wife
The trophied arches, storied halls, invade. Pope.

STORK. n. s. [stork, Saxon; ciconia, Lat.]

A bird of passage, famous for the regularity of its departure.

Its beak and legs are long and red; it feeds upon serpents, frogs, and insects: its plumage would be quite white, were not the extremity of its wings,
and also some part of its head and thighs, black: it fits for thirty days, and lays but four eggs: they go away in the middle of August, and return in spring.
Calmet.

The stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times. Jeremiah.

Who bid the stork, Columbus like, explore
Heavens not his own, and worlds unknown before?
Who calls the council, flates the certain day,
Who forms the phalanx, and who points the way?
Pope.

STORKSBILL. n. s. [geranium, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

STORM. n. s. [ystorm, Welsh; sturm,
Saxon; storm, Dutch; stormo, Italian.]

1. A tempest; a commotion of the elements.

O turn thy rudder hitherward a while,
Here may thy storm-beat vessel safely ride. Spenser.
We hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm. Shakspeare.

Them she upstays, mindless the while
Herself, though fairest unsupported flower,
From her best prop so far, and storm so nigh. Milton.
Sulphurous hail shot after us in storm. Milton.
Then stay, my child! storms beat, and rolls the
main;
Oh beat those storms, and roll the seas, in vain!
Pope.

2. Assault on a fortified place.

How by storm the walls were won,
Or how the victor sack'd and burnt the town. Dryd.

3. Commotion; sedition; tumult; clamour; bustle.

Whilst I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm. Shakspeare.
Her sister

Began to scold and raise up such a storm,
That mortal ears might hardly endure the din.
Shakspeare.

4. Affliction; calamity; distress.

A brave man struggling in the storms of fate. Pope.

5. Violence; vehemence; tumultuous force.

As oft as we are delivered from those either imminent or present calamities, against the storm and tempest whereof we all instantly craved favour from above, let it be a question what we should render unto God for his blessings, universally, sensibly, and extraordinarily bestowed. Hooker.

To STORM. v. a. [from the noun.] To attack by open force.

From ploughs and harrows sent to seek renown,
They fight in fields, and storm the shaken town.
Dryden.

There the brazen tow'r was storm'd of old,
When Jove descended in almighty gold. Pope.

To STORM. v. a.

1. To raise tempests.

So now he storms with many a sturdy stoure,
So now his blustering blast each coast doth scoure.
Spenser.

2. To rage; to fume; to be loudly angry.

Hoarse, and all in rage,
As mock'd they storm. Milton.
When you return, the master storms, the lady scolds. Swift.

While thus they rail, and scold, and storm,
It passes but for common form. Swift.

STORMY. adj. [from storm.]

1. Tempestuous.

Bellying clouds burst with a stormy sound,
And with an armed winter strew the ground.
Addison.

The tender apples, from their parents rent
By stormy shocks, must not neglected lie. Philips.

2. Violent; passionate.

STORY. n. s. [storp, Saxon; storie, Dut.
storia, Italian; isoria.]

1. History; account of things past.

The fable of the dividing of the world between the three sons of Saturn, arose from the true story of the dividing of the earth between the three brethren,
the sons of Noah. Raleigh.

Thee I have heard relating what was done
Ere my remembrance: now hear me relate
My story, which perhaps thou hast not heard. Milt.
The four great monarchies make the subject of ancient story, and are related by the Greek and Latin authors. Temple.

Matters of fact, concerning times, places, persons,
actions, which depend upon story, and the relation of others, these things are not capable of being proved
by such scientific principles. Wilkins.

Governments that once made such a noise, as founded upon the deepest counsels and the strongest force, yet by some flight miscarriage, which let in ruin upon them, are now so utterly extinct, that nothing remains of them but a name; nor are there
the least traces of them to be found, but only in story. South.

2. Small tale; petty narrative; account of a single incident.

In the road between Berne and Soleure, a monument erected by the republic of Berne tells us the story of an Englishman not to be met with in any of our own writers. Addison.

3. An idle or trifling tale; a petty fiction.

These flaws and starts would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire,
Authoris'd by her grandame. Shakspeare.

This scene had some bold Greek or British bard
Beheld of old, what stories had we heard
Of fairies, satyrs, and the nymphs their dames,
Their feats, their revels, and their am'rous flames!
Denham.

My maid left on the table one of her story books,
which I found full of strange impertinence, of poor
servants who came to be ladies. Swift.

4. [stōn, place, Saxon.] A floor; a flight of rooms.

Avoid enormous heights of seven stories, and the contrary fault of low distended fronts. Wotton.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloris
Might raise a house about two stories;
A lyric ode would flate; a catch
Would tile; an epigram would thatch. Swift.

To STORY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tell in history; to relate.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter,
rather than story him in his own hearing. Shakspeare.
'Tis not vain or fabulous

What the sage poets, taught by th' heavenly muse,
Storied of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimeras and enchanted isles,
And rifted rocks whose entrance leads to hell. Milt.

It is storied of the brazen Colossus, in the island of Rhodes, that it was seventy cubits high; the thumbs of it being so big, that no man could grasp one of them with both his arms. Wilkins.

Recite them, nor in erring pity fear
To wound with storied griefs the filial ear. Pope.

2. To range one under another.

Because all the parts of an undisturbed fluid are of equal gravity, or gradually placed or storied according to the difference of it, any concretion that can be supposed to be naturally and mechanically made in such a fluid, must have a like structure of its several parts; that is, either be all over of a similar gravity, or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its basis.
Bentley.

STORYTELLER. n. s. [story and tell.] One who relates tales in conversation; a historian, in contempt.

In such a satire all would seek a share,
And every fool will fancy he is there;
Old storytellers too must pine and die,
To see their antiquated wit laid by;
Like her, who mis'd her name in a lampoon,
And griev'd to find herself decay'd so soon. Dryden.
Company will be no longer pestered with dull, dry,
tedious storytellers. Swift.

STOVE. n. s. [stoo, Islandick, a fire-place;
stōpōa, Saxon; estuve, French; stove,
Dutch.]

1. A hothouse; a place artificially made warm.

Fishermen who make holes in the ice, to dip up such fish with their nets as resort thither for breathing, light on swallows congealed in clods of a slimy substance, and carrying them home to their stoves, the warmth recovereth them to life and flight.

Carew.

Stoves, which could autumn of cold winter make; Fountains in autumn to bring winter back. Beaum.

The heat which arises out of the lesser spiracles brings forth nitre and sulphur; some of which it affixes to the tops and sides of the grottos, which are usually so hot as to serve for natural stoves or sweating-vaults.

Woodward.

The most proper place for unction is a stove.

Wiseman.

2. A place in which fire is made, and by which heat is communicated.

If the season prove exceeding piercing, in your great house kindle some charcoals; and when they have done smoaking, put them into a hole sunk a little into the floor, about the middle of it. This is the safest stove.

Evelyn.

To STOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To keep warm in a house artificially heated.

For December, January, and the latter part of November, take such things as are green all winter; orange trees, lemon trees, and myrtles, if they be stoved; and sweet marjoram warm set.

Bacon.

To STOUND. v. n. [stunde, I grieved, Islandick.]

1. To be in pain or sorrow. Out of use.

2. For stunned.

STOUND. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Sorrow; grief; mishap. Out of use.

The Scots retain it.

Begin and end the bitter baleful stound,
If less than that I fear.

Spenser.

The fox his copesmate found,

To whom complaining his unhappy stound,

He with him far'd some better chance to find.

Spenser.

2. Astonishment; amazement.

Thus we stood, as in a stound,

And wet with tears, like dew, the ground.

Gay.

3. Hour; time; season.

STOUR. n. f. [stur, Runick, a battle; pteopan, Saxon, to disturb.] Assault; incursion; tumult. Obsolete.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy stour,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heav'nly bow'r.

Fairy Queen.

Love, that long since has to thy mighty powre

Per force subdued my poor captived heart,

And raging now therein with restless stoure,

Dost tyrannize in every weaker part.

Spenser.

The giant struck so mainly merciless,

That could have overthrown a stony tower;

And, were not heav'nly grace that him did bless,

He had been pouldered all as thin as flower,

But he was wary of that deadly stoure.

Spenser.

STOUT. adj. [stout, Dutch; stolz, proud, German; stautan, Gothick, is to strike.]

1. Strong; lusty; valiant.

When I was young,

I do remember how my father said,

A stouter champion never handled sword.

Shaksp.

Some captain of the land or fleet,

Stout of his hands, but of a soldier's wit,

Cries, I have sense to serve my turn, in store,

And he's a rascal who pretends to more.

Dryden.

2. Brave; bold; intrepid.

The stout-hearted are spoiled.

Psalms.

He lost the character of a bold, stout, and magnanimous man, which he had been long reputed to be.

Clarendon.

3. Obstinate; pertinacious; resolute; proud.

The lords all stand,

To clear their cause, most resolutely stout.

Daniel.

There virtue and stout honour pass'd the guard,

Those only friends that could not be debarr'd.

Bathurst.

4. Strong; firm.

The stoutest vessel to the storm gave way,
And suck'd through loosen'd planks the rushing sea.

Dryden.

STOUT. n. f. A cant name for strong beer.

Should but his muse descending drop

A slice of bread and mutton chop,

Or kindly, when his credit's out,

Surprise him with a pint of stout;

Exalted in his mighty mind,

He flies and leaves the stars behind.

Swift.

STOUTLY. adv. [from stout.] Lustily; boldly; obstinately.

STOUTNESS. n. f. [from stout.]

1. Strength; valour.

2. Boldness; fortitude.

His bashfulness in youth was the very true sign of his virtue and stoutness after.

Ascham.

3. Obstinacy; stubbornness.

Come all to ruin, let

Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear

Thy dangerous stoutness: for I mock at death

With as stout heart as thou.

Shakspere.

To STOW. v. a. [stop, Saxon; stoe, old Frisick, a place; stowen, Dutch, to lay up.] To lay up; to repose in order; to lay in the proper place.

Foul thief? where hast thou stow'd my daughter?

Shakspere.

I th' holsters of the saddle-bow

Two aged pistols he did stow.

Hudibras.

Some stow their oars, or stop the leaky sides.

Dryden.

All the patriots were beheaded, stowed in dungeons, or condemned to work in the mines.

Addis.

The goddess shov'd the vessel from the shores,

And stow'd within its womb the naval stores.

Pope.

So grieves th' advent'rous merchant, when he throws

All his long-toil'd-for treasure his ship stows

Into the angry main.

Carew.

STOWAGE. n. f. [from stow.]

1. Room for laying up.

In every vessel is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion, or merchandize of as great a value.

Addison.

2. The state of being laid up.

'Tis plate of rare device, and jewels

Of rich and exquisite form; their value's great;

And I am something curious, being strange,

To have them in safe stowage.

Shakspere.

3. Money paid for stowing of goods.

STOWE, STOE, whether singly or jointly, are the same with the Saxon stop, a place.

Gibson.

STRA'BISM. n. f. [strabism, Fr. strabismus, Latin.] A squinting; act of looking askint.

To STRA'DDLE. v. n. [supposed to come from striddle or stride.] To stand or walk with the feet removed far from each other to the right and left; to part the legs wide.

Let man survey himself, divested of artificial charms, and he will find himself a forked straddling animal, with bandy legs.

Arbutnot and Pope.

To STRAGGLE. v. a. [Of this word no etymology is known: it is probably a frequentative of stray, from straviare, Italian, of extra viam, Latin.]

1. To wander without any certain direction; to rove; to ramble.

But stay; like one that thinks to bring his friend

A mile or two, and sees the journey's end,

I straggle on too far.

Suckling.

A wolf spied out a *straggl*ing kid, and pursued him.

L'Estrange.

Children, even when they endeavour their utmost cannot keep their minds from *straggl*ing.

Locke.

2. To wander dispersedly.

He likewise enriched poor *straggl*ing soldiers with

Shakspere.

They found in Burford some of the *straggl*ing soldiers, who out of weariness stayed behind.

Clarendon.

Form *straggl*ing mountaineers, for publick good, To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood; Houses to build, and them contiguous make, For cheerful neighbourhood and safety's sake.

Tate.

3. To exuberate; to shoot too far.

Were they content to prune the lavish vine

Of *straggl*ing branches, and improve the wine.

Trim off the small superfluous branches on each side of the hedge, that straggle too far out.

Mortimer.

4. To be dispersed; to be apart from any main body; to stand single.

Having passed the Syrens, they came between Scylla and Charybdis, and the *straggl*ing rocks, which seemed to cast out great store of flames and smoke.

Raleigh.

Wide was his parish, not contracted close

In streets, but here and there a *straggl*ing house;

Yet still he was at hand.

Dryden.

STRAGGLER. n. f. [from straggle.]

1. A wanderer; a rover; one who forsakes his company; one who rambles without any settled direction.

The last should keep the countries from passage of stragglers from those parts, whence they use to come forth, and oftentimes use to work much mischief.

Spenser.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again,

Lash hence these over-weening rags of France,

These famish'd beggars.

Shakspere.

Bottles missing are supposed to be half stolen by stragglers, and the other half broken.

Swift.

2. Any thing that pushes beyond the rest, or stands single.

Let thy hand supply the pruning knife,

And crop luxuriant stragglers, nor be loth

To strip the branches of their leafy growth.

Dryden.

His pruning hook corrects the vines,

And the loose stragglers to their ranks confines.

Pope.

STRAIGHT. adj. [strack, old Dutch.

It is well observed by Ainsworth, that for not crooked we ought to write straight, and for narrow, strait; but for streight, which is sometimes found, there is no good authority.]

1. Not crooked; right.

Beauty made barren the swell'd boast

Of him that best could speak; feature, laming

The shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Minerva.

Shakspere.

A hunter's horn and cornet is oblique; yet they have likewise straight horns; which, if they be of the same bore with the oblique, differ little in sound, save that the straight require somewhat a stronger blast.

Bacon.

There are many several sorts of crooked lines; but there is one only which is straight.

Dryden.

Water and air the varied form confound;

The straight looks crooked, and the square grows round.

Prior.

When I see a strait staff appear crooked while half under the water, the water gives me a false idea.

Watts.

2. Narrow; close. This should properly be strait. [estroit, Fr. See STRAIT.]

Queen Elizabeth used to say of her instructions to great officers, that they were like to garments, strait at the first putting on, but did by and by wear loose enough.

Bacon.

3. Tense; tight. Of this sense it is doubtful whether it belongs to strait, close, narrow; or to straight, not crooked. Pull the cord straight, may mean, draw it till it has no flexure; tie it strait about you, may mean, draw it into a narrower compass. This ambiguity has perhaps confounded the orthography.

STRAIGHT. adv. [strax, Danish; strack, Dutch.] Immediately; directly. This

3. The state of being accumulated; hoard.
Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up
among my treasures? Deuteronomy.

4. Storehouse; magazine.

Sulphurous and nitrous foam,
Concocted and adusted, they reduc'd
To blackest grain, and into store convey'd. Milton.

STORE. adj. Hoarded; laid up; accumulated.

What floods of treasure have flowed into Europe
by that action, so that the cause of christendom is raised since twenty times told: of this treasure the gold was accumulate and store treasure; but the silver is still growing. Bacon.

To STORE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish; to replenish.

Wife Plato said the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.
Her face with thousand beauties blest;
Her mind with thousand virtues stor'd;
Her power with boundless joy confest,
Her person only not ador'd. Prior.

2. To stock against a future time.

Some were of opinion that it were best to stay where they were, until more aid and store of victuals were come; but others said the enemy were
but barely stored with victuals, and therefore could not long hold out. Knolles.

One having stored a pond of four acres with carps,
tench, and other fish, and only put in two small pikes, at seven years end, upon the draught, not one fish was left, but the two pikes grown to an excessive bigness. Hale.

The mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, which I call ideas of reflection.
Locke.

To store the vessel let the care be mine
With water from the rocks, and rosy wine,
And life-sustaining bread. Pope.

3. To lay up; to hoard.

Let the main part of the corn be a common stock,
laid in and stored up, and then delivered out in proportion. Bacon.

STOREHOUSE. n. s. [store and house.]

1. Magazine; treasury; place in which things are hoarded and repositied against
a time of use.

By us it is willingly confessed, that the scripture of God is a storehouse abounding with inestimable treasures of wisdom and knowledge, in many kinds over
and above things in this kind barely necessary. Hooker.

Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses cramm'd
with grain! Shakspeare.

Joseph opened all the storehouses, and sold unto
the Egyptians. Genesis.

To these high pow'rs a storehouse doth pertain,
Where they all arts and gen'ral reasons lay;
Which in the soul, ev'n after death, remain,
And no Lethæan blood can wash away. Davies.

My heart hath been a storehouse long of things
And sayings laid up, portending strange events. Mil.

The image of God was resplendent in man's practical understanding, that storehouse of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality. South.

As many different sounds as can be made by single articulations, so many letters there are in the store-
house of nature. Holder.

2. A great mass repositied.

They greatly joyed merry tales to feign,
Of which a storehouse did with her remain. F. Qu.

STO'RER. n. s. [from store.] One who
lays up.

STO'RIED. adj. [from story.] Furnished with stories; adorned with historical pictures.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloister pale,
And love the high embowed roof,
With antick pillar, massy proof;
And storied windows, richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light. Milton.

Some greedy minion or imperious wife
The trophied arches, storied halls, invade. Pope.

STORK. n. s. [stork, Saxon; ciconia, Lat.]

A bird of passage, famous for the regularity of its departure.

Its beak and legs are long and red; it feeds upon serpents, frogs, and insects: its plumage would be quite white, were not the extremity of its wings,
and also some part of its head and thighs, black: it sits for thirty days, and lays but four eggs: they go away in the middle of August, and return in spring.
Calmet.

The stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times. Jeremiah.

Who bid the stork, Columbus like, explore
Heavens not his own, and worlds unknown before?
Who calls the council, states the certain day,
Who forms the phalanx, and who points the way?
Pope.

ST'ORKSBILL. n. s. [geranium, Lat.] An
herb. Ainsworth.

STORM. n. s. [ystorm, Welsh; sturm,
Saxon; storm, Dutch; stormo, Italian.]

1. A tempest; a commotion of the elements.

O turn thy rudder hitherward a while,
Here may thy storm-beat vessel safely ride. Spenser.

We hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm. Shakspeare.

Them she upstays, mindless the while
Herself, though fairest unsupported flower,
From her best prop so far, and storm so nigh. Milton.

Sulphurous hail shot after us in storm. Milton.

Then stay, my child! storms beat, and rolls the
main;
Oh beat those storms, and roll the seas, in vain!
Pope.

2. Assault on a fortified place.

How by storm the walls were won,
Or how the victor sack'd and burnt the town. Dryd.

3. Commotion; sedition; tumult; clamour; bustle.

Whilst I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm. Shaksp.

Her sister
Began to scold and raise up such a storm,
That mortal ears might hardly endure the din.
Shakspeare.

4. Affliction; calamity; distress.

A brave man struggling in the storms of fate. Pope.

5. Violence; vehemence; tumultuous force.

As oft as we are delivered from those either imminent or present calamities, against the storm and tempest whereof we all instantly craved favour from above, let it be a question what we should render unto God for his blessings, universally, sensibly, and extraordinarily bestowed. Hooker.

To STORM. v. a. [from the noun.] To
attack by open force.

From ploughs and harrows sent to seek renown,
They fight in fields, and storm the shaken town.
Dryden.

There the brazen tow'r was storm'd of old,
When Jove descended in almighty gold. Pope.

To STORM. v. a.

1. To raise tempests.

So now he storms with many a sturdy stoure,
So now his blustering blast each coast doth scoure.
Spenser.

2. To rage; to fume; to be loudly angry.

Hoarse, and all in rage,
As mock'd they storm. Milton.

When you return, the master storms, the lady
scolds. Swift.

While thus they rail, and scold, and storm,
It passes but for common form. Swift.

STO'RM. adj. [from storm.]

1. Tempestuous.

Bellowing clouds burst with a stormy sound,
And with an armed winter strew the ground.
Addison.

The tender apples, from their parents rent
By stormy shocks, must not neglected lie. Philips.

2. Violent; passionate.

STO'RY. n. s. [storp, Saxon; storie, Dut.
storia, Italian; istoria.]

1. History; account of things past.

The fable of the dividing of the world between the three sons of Saturn, arose from the true story of the dividing of the earth between the three brethren,
the sons of Noah. Raleigh.

Thou I have heard relating what was done
Ere my remembrance: now hear me relate
My story, which perhaps thou hast not heard. Milt.

The four great monarchies make the subject of ancient story, and are related by the Greek and Latin authors. Temple.

Matters of fact, concerning times, places, persons,
actions, which depend upon story, and the relation of
others, these things are not capable of being proved
by such scientific principles. Wilkins.

Governments that once made such a noise, as founded upon the deepest counsels and the strongest force, yet by some slight miscarriage, which let in ruin upon them, are now so utterly extinct, that nothing remains of them but a name; nor are there
the least traces of them to be found, but only in story. South.

2. Small tale; petty narrative; account of a single incident.

In the road between Berne and Soleurre, a monument erected by the republic of Berne tells us the story of an Englishman not to be met with in any of our own writers. Addison.

3. An idle or trifling tale; a petty fiction.

These flaws and starts would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire,
Authoris'd by her grandame. Shakspeare.

This scene had some bold Greek or British bard
Beheld of old, what stories had we heard
Of fairies, satyrs, and the nymphs their dames,
Their feasts, their revels, and their am'rous flames!
Denham.

My maid left on the table one of her story books,
which I found full of strange impertinence, of poor
servants who came to be ladies. Swift.

4. [storp, place, Saxon.] A floor; a flight of rooms.

Avoid enormous heights of seven stories, and the contrary fault of low distended fronts. Wotton.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloris
Might raise a house about two stories;
A lyric ode would flate; a catch
Would tile; an epigram would thatch. Swift.

To STORY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tell in history; to relate.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter,
rather than story him in his own hearing. Shaksp.

'Tis not vain or fabulous
What the sage poets, taught by th' heavenly muse,
Storied of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimeras and enchanted isles,
And rifted rocks whose entrance leads to hell. Milt.

It is storied of the brazen Colossus, in the island of Rhodes, that it was seventy cubits high; the thumbs
of it being so big, that no man could grasp one of them with both his arms. Wilkins.

Recite them, nor in erring pity fear
To wound with storied griefs the filial ear. Pope.

2. To range one under another.

Because all the parts of an undisturbed fluid are of equal gravity, or gradually placed or storied according to the difference of it, any concretion that can be supposed to be naturally and mechanically made in such a fluid, must have a like structure of its several parts; that is, either be all over of a similar gravity,
or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its basis.
Bentley.

STO'RYTELLER. n. s. [story and tell.] One who relates tales in conversation; a historian, in contempt.

In such a satire all would seek a share,
And every fool will fancy he is there;
Old storytellers too must pine and die,
To see their antiquated wit laid by;
Like her, who mis'd her name in a lampoon,
And griev'd to find herself decay'd so soon. Dryden.

Company will be no longer pestered with dull, dry,
tedious storytellers. Swift.

STOVE. n. s. [stoo, Islandick, a fire-place;
stovoa, Saxon; estuve, French; stove,
Dutch.]

1. A hothouse; a place artificially made warm.

Fishermen who make holes in the ice, to dip up such fish with their nets as resort thither for breathing, light on swallows congealed in clods of a slimy substance, and carrying them home to their stoves, the warmth recovereth them to life and flight.

Carew.

Stoves, which could autumn of cold winter make; Fountains in autumn to bring winter back. Beaum.

The heat which arises out of the lesser spiracles brings forth nitre and sulphur; some of which it affixes to the tops and sides of the grottos, which are usually so hot as to serve for natural stoves or sweating-vaults.

Woodward.

The most proper place for unction is a stove.

Wifeman.

2. A place in which fire is made, and by which heat is communicated.

If the season prove exceeding piercing, in your great house kindle some charcoals; and when they have done smoking, put them into a hole sunk a little into the floor, about the middle of it. This is the safest stove.

Evelyn.

To STOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To keep warm in a house artificially heated.

For December, January, and the latter part of November, take such things as are green all winter; orange trees, lemon trees, and myrtles, if they be stowed; and sweet marjoram warm set.

Bacon.

To STOUND. v. n. [stunde, I grieved, Islandick.]

1. To be in pain or sorrow. Out of use.

2. For stunned.

STOUND. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Sorrow; grief; mishap. Out of use. The Scots retain it.

Begin and end the bitter baleful stound,
If less than that I fear.

Spenser.

The fox his copesmate found,
To whom complaining his unhappy stound,
He with him far'd some better chance to find.

Spenser.

2. Astonishment; amazement.

Thus we stood, as in a stound,
And wet with tears, like dew, the ground.

Gay.

3. Hour; time; season.

STOUR. n. f. [stur, Runick, a battle; ræonan, Saxon, to disturb.] Assault; incursion; tumult. Obsolete.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy stour,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heav'nly bow'r.

Fairy Queen.

Love, that long since has to thy mighty powre
Per force subdued my poor captiv'd heart,

And raging now therein with restless stoure,
Dost tyrannize in every weaker part.

Spenser.

The giant struck so mainly merciless,
That could have overthrown a stonny tower;
And, were not heav'nly grace that him did bless,
He had been pouldered all as thin as flower,
But he was wary of that deadly stoure.

Spenser.

STOUT. adj. [stout, Dutch; stolz, proud, German; stautan, Gothick, is to strike.]

1. Strong; lusty; valiant.

When I was young,
I do remember how my father said,
A stouter champion never handled sword.
Some captain of the land or fleet,
Stout of his hands, but of a soldier's wit,
Cries, I have sense to serve my turn in store,
And he's a rascal who pretends to more.

Shaksp.

Dryden.

2. Brave; bold; intrepid.

The stout-hearted are spoiled.
He lost the character of a bold, stout, and magnanimous man, which he had been long reputed to be.

Psalms.

Clarendon.

3. Obstinate; pertinacious; resolute; proud.

The lords all stand,
To clear their cause, most resolutely stout.
There virtue and stout honour pass'd the guard,
Those only friends that could not be debarr'd.

Daniel.

Bathurst.

4. Strong; firm.

The stoutest vessel to the storm gave way,
And suck'd through loosen'd planks the rushing sea.

Dryden.

STOUT. n. f. A cant name for strong beer.

Should but his muse descending drop
A slice of bread and mutton chop,
Or kindly, when his credit's out,
Surprise him with a pint of stout;
Exalted in his mighty mind,
He flies and leaves the stars behind.

Swift.

STOUTLY. adv. [from stout.] Lustily; boldly; obstinately.STOUTNESS. n. f. [from stout.]

1. Strength; valour.

2. Boldness; fortitude.

His bashfulness in youth was the very true sign of his virtue and stoutness after.

Ascham.

3. Obstinacy; stubbornness.

Come all to ruin, let
Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear
Thy dangerous stoutness: for I mock at death
With as stout heart as thou.

Shakspere.

To STOW. v. a. [stow, Saxon; stoe, old Frisick, a place; stowen, Dutch, to lay up.] To lay up; to repose in order; to lay in the proper place.

Foul thief? where hast thou stow'd my daughter?

Shakspere.

I th' holsters of the saddle-bow
Two aged pistols he did stow.
Some stow their oars, or stop the leaky sides.

Hudibras.

Dryden.

All the patriots were beheaded, stowed in dungeons, or condemned to work in the mines. Addison.
The goddesses stow'd the vessel from the shores,
And stow'd within its womb the naval stores. Pope.
So grieves th' advent'rous merchant, when he throws

All his long-toil'd-for treasure his ship stows
Into the angry main.

Carew.

STOWAGE. n. f. [from stow.]

1. Room for laying up.

In every vessel is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion, or merchandize of as great a value.

Addison.

2. The state of being laid up.

'Tis plate of rare device, and jewels
Of rich and exquisite form; their value's great;
And I am something curious, being strange,
To have them in safe stowage.

Shakspere.

3. Money paid for stowing of goods.

STOWE, STOE, whether singly or jointly,
are the same with the Saxon stow, a place.

Gibson.

STRA'BISM. n. f. [strabism, Fr. strabismus, Latin.] A squinting; act of looking askint.To STRADDLE. v. n. [supposed to come from striddle or stride.] To stand or walk with the feet removed far from each other to the right and left; to part the legs wide.

Let man survey himself, divested of artificial charms, and he will find himself a forked straddling animal, with bandy legs.

Arbutnot and Pope.

To STRAGGLE. v. a. [Of this word no etymology is known: it is probably a frequentative of stray, from straviare, Italian, of extra viam, Latin.]

1. To wander without any certain direction; to rove; to ramble.

But stay; like one that thinks to bring his friend
A mile or two, and sees the journey's end,
I straggle on too far.

Suckling.

A wolf spied out a stragging kid, and pursued him.

L'Esrange.

Children, even when they endeavour their utmost, cannot keep their minds from stragging.

Locke.

2. To wander dispersedly.

He likewise enriched poor stragging soldiers with great quantity.

Shakspere.

They found in Burford some of the stragging soldiers, who out of weariness stayed behind.

Clarendon.

Form stragging mountaineers, for publick good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood;
Houses to build, and them contiguous make,
For cheerful neighbourhood and safety's sake. Tate.

3. To exuberate; to shoot too far.

Were they content to prune the lavish vine
Of stragging branches, and improve the wine.
Trim off the small superfluous branches on each side of the hedge, that straggle too far out. Mortimer

4. To be dispersed; to be apart from any main body; to stand single.

Having passed the Syrens, they came between Scylla and Charybdis, and the stragging rocks, which seemed to cast out great store of flames and smoke.

Raleigh.

Wide was his parish, not contracted close
In streets, but here and there a stragging house;
Yet still he was at hand.

Dryden.

STRAGGLER. n. f. [from straggle.]

1. A wanderer; a rover; one who forsakes his company; one who rambles without any settled direction.

The last should keep the countries from passage of stragglers from those parts, whence they use to come forth, and oftentimes use to work much mischief.

Spenser.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again,
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars.

Shakspere.

Bottles missing are supposed to be half stolen by stragglers, and the other half broken.

Swift.

2. Any thing that pushes beyond the rest, or stands single.

Let thy hand supply the pruning knife,
And crop luxuriant stragglers, nor be loth
To strip the branches of their leafy growth.

Dryden.

His pruning hook corrects the vines,
And the loose stragglers to their ranks confines.

Pope.

STRAIGHT. adj. [strack, old Dutch.

It is well observed by Ainsworth, that for not crooked we ought to write straight, and for narrow, strait; but for streight, which is sometimes found, there is no good authority.]

1. Not crooked; right.

Beauty made barren the swell'd boast
Of him that best could speak; feature, laming
The shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Minerva.

Shakspere.

A hunter's horn and cornet is oblique; yet they have likewise straight horns; which, if they be of the same bore with the oblique, differ little in sound, save that the straight require somewhat a stronger blast.

Bacon.

There are many several sorts of crooked lines; but there is one only which is straight.

Dryden.

Water and air the varied form confound;
The straight looks crooked, and the square grows round.

Prior.

When I see a strait staff appear crooked while half under the water, the water gives me a false idea.

Watts.

2. Narrow; close. This should properly be strait. [estroit, Fr. See STRAIT.]

Queen Elizabeth used to say of her instructions to great officers, that they were like to garments, strait at the first putting on, but did by and by wear loose enough.

Bacon.

3. Tense; tight. Of this sense it is doubtful whether it belongs to strait, close, narrow; or to straight, not crooked. Pull the cord straight, may mean, draw it till it has no flexure; tie it strait about you, may mean, draw it into a narrower compass. This ambiguity has perhaps confounded the orthography.

STRAIGHT. adv. [strax, Danish; strack, Dutch.] Immediately; directly. This sense is naturally derived from the adjective, as a straight line is the shortest line between two points.

If the devil come and roar for them,
I will not fend them. I will after straight,
And tell him so. Shakspeare.

Those stinks which the nostrils straight abhor and expel, are not the most pernicious. Bacon.

With chalk I first describe a circle here,
Where the ætherial spirits must appear:
Come in, come in: for here they will be strait:
Around, around the place I fumigate. Dryden.

I know thy generous temper well;
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it,
It straight takes fire, and mounts into a blaze.
Addison.

TO STRAIGHTEN. v. a. [from straight.]

1. To make not crooked; to make straight.

A crooked stick is not straightened, except it be as far bent on the clean contrary side. Hooker.

Of ourselves being so apt to err, the only way which we have to straighten our paths is, by following the rule of his will, whose footsteps naturally are right.
Hooker.

2. To make tense; to tighten.

STRAIGHTLY. adv. [from straight.]

1. In a right line; not crookedly.

2. Tightly; with tension.

STRAIGHTNESS. n. f. [from straight.]

1. Rectitude; the contrary to crookedness.
Some are for masts, as fir and pine, because of their length and straightness. Bacon.

2. Tension; tightness.

STRAIGHTWAY. adv. [straight and way.]

It is very often written straightways, and therefore is perhaps more properly written straightwise.] Immediately; straight.
Let me here for ay in peace remain,
Or straightway on that last long voyage fare.
Spenser.

Soon as he enter'd was, the door straightway
Did shut. Spenser.

Like to a ship, that, having 'scap'd a tempest,
Is straightway claim'd and boarded with a pirate.
Shakspeare.

The Turks straightway breaking in upon them, made a bloody fight. Knolles.

As soon as iron is out of the fire, it deadeth straightways. Bacon.

The sound of a bell is strong; continueth some time after the percussion; but ceaseth straightways
if the bell or string be touched. Bacon.

The sun's power being in those months greater, it then straightways hurries steams up into the atmosphere. Woodward.

TO STRAIN. v. a. [esteindre, French.]

1. To squeeze through something.

Their aliment ought to be light; rice boiled in whey, and strained. Arbutnot.

2. To purify by filtration.

Earth doth not strain water so finely as sand.
Bacon.

3. To squeeze in an embrace.

I would have strain'd him with a strict embrace;
But through my arms he slipt and vanish'd. Dryden.

Old Evander with a close embrace Strain'd his departing friend, and tears o'erflow'd his face. Dryden.

4. To sprain; to weaken by too much violence.

The jury make no more scruple to pass against an Englishman and the queen, though it be to strain their oaths, than to drink milk unstrained. Spenser.

Prudes decay'd about may tack,
Strain their necks with looking back. Swift.

5. To put to its utmost strength.

By this we see, in a cause of religion, to how desperate adventures men will strain themselves for relief of their own part, having law and authority against them. Hooker.

Too well I wote my humble vaine,
And how my rhimes been rugged and unkempt;
Yet as I can my cunning I will strain. Spenser.

VOL. II.

Thus mine enemy fell,
And thus I set my foot on's neck;—even then
The princely blood flows in his cheek; he sweats, Strains his young nerves, and puts himself in posture
That acts my words. Shakspeare.

My earthly by his heavenly overpower'd,
Which it had long stood under, strain'd to th'
height

In that celestial colloquy sublime,
As with an object that excels the sense,
Dazzled and spent, sunk down. Milton.

The lark and linnet sing with rival notes;
They strain their warbling throats
To welcome in the spring. Dryden.

Nor yet content, she strains her malice more,
And adds new ills to those contriv'd before. Dryden.

It is the worst sort of good husbandry for a father not to strain himself a little for his son's breeding.
Locke.

Our words flow from us in a smooth continued stream, without those strainings of the voice, motions of the body, and majesty of the hand, which are so much celebrated in the orators of Greece and Rome. Atterbury.

Strain'd to the root, the stooping forest pours
A rustling shower of yet untimely leaves. Thomson.

6. To make straight or tense.

A bigger string more strained, and a lesser string less strained, may fall into the same tone.
Bacon.

Thou, the more he varies forms, beware
To strain his fetters with a stricter care. Dryden.

7. To push beyond the proper extent.

See they suffer death;
But in their deaths remember they are men,
Strain not the laws to make their torture grievous.
Addison.

There can be no other meaning in this expression,
however some may pretend to strain it. Swift.

Your way is to wrest and strain some principles, maintained both by them and me, to a sense repugnant with their other known doctrines. Waterland.

8. To force; to constrain; to make uneasy or unnatural.

The lark sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords and unpleasing sharps.
Shakspeare.

He talks and plays with Fatima, but his mirth
Is forc'd and strained: in his looks appears
A wild distracted fierceness. Denham.

TO STRAIN. v. n.

1. To make violent efforts.

To build his fortune I will strain a little,
For 'tis a bond in men. Shakspeare.

You stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. Shakspeare.

They strain,
That death may not them idly find t' attend
Their certain last, but work to meet their end.
Daniel.

Straining with too weak a wing,
We needs will write epistles to the king. Pope.

2. To be filtered by compression.

Cæsar thought that all sea sands had natural springs of fresh water: but it is the sea water; because the pit filled according to the measure of the tide; and the sea-water, passing or straining through the sands, leaveth the saltness behind them.
Bacon.

STRAIN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An injury by too much violence.

Credit is gained by custom, and seldom recovers
a strain; but, if broken, is never well set again.
Temple.

In all pain there is a deformity by a solution of continuity, as in cutting; or a tendency to solution, as in convulsions or strains. Grew.

2. [Jernge, Saxon.] Race; generation; descent.

Thus far I can praise him; he is of a noble strain,
Of approv'd valour. Shakspeare.

Twelve Trojan youths, born of their noblest strains,
I took alive; and, yet enrag'd, will empty all their veins

Of vital spirits. Chapman.

Why dost thou falsely feign
Thyself a Sidney; from which noble strain
He sprung, that could so far exalt the name Of love. Waller.

Turn then to Pharamond and Charlemagne,
And the long heroes of the Gallic strain. Prior.

3. Hereditary disposition.

Amongst these sweet knaves and all this courtesy!
the strain of man's bred out into baboon and monkey. Shakspeare.

Intemperance and lust breed diseases, which propagated, spoil the strain of a nation. Tillotson.

4. A style or manner of speaking.

According to the genius and strain of the book of Proverbs, the words wisdom and righteousness are used to signify all religion and virtue. Tillotson.

In our liturgy are as great strains of true sublime eloquence, as are any where to be found in our language. Swift.

Macrobius speaks of Hippocrates' knowledge in very lofty strains. Baker.

5. Song; note; sound.

Wilt thou love such a woman? what, to make thee an instrument, and play false strains upon thee? Shakspeare.

Orpheus' self may heave his head
From golden slumber on a bed
Of heap'd Elysian flowers, and hear
Such strains as would have won the ear
Of Pluto, to have quite set free
His half-regain'd Eurydice. Milton.

Their heav'nly harps a lower strain began,
And in soft musick mourn the fall of man.
Dryden.

When the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain;

and black. Sandys.

To-morrow, ere fresh morning streak the east,
With first approach of light we must be ris'n,
And at our pleasant labour, to reform
Yon flow'ry arbour. Milton.

Now let us leave this earth, and lift our eye
To the large convex of yon' azure sky;
Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red,
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing fable for the peaceful night. Prior.

2. To stretch. Obsolete.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks;
Where, glotting round her rock, to fish she falls. Chapman.

STREAKY. adj. [from streak.] Striped;
variegated by hues.

When the hoary head is hid in snow,
The life is in the leaf, and still between
The fits of falling snows appears the streaky green. Dryden.

STREAM. n. s. [stneam, Saxon; straum, Islandick; stroom, Dutch.]

S T R

1. A running water; the course of running water; current.

As plays the sun upon the glassy stream,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam. Shakspeare.

He brought streams out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers. Psalms.

Cocytus nam'd, of lamentation loud
Heard in the rueful stream; fierce Phlegethon, Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage;
Far off from these, a slow and silent stream,
Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls
Her wat'ry labyrinth. Milton.

O could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
My great example, as thou art my theme!
Tho' deep yet clear, tho' gentle yet not dull,
Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full. Denham.

Thus from one common source our streams divide;
Our's is the Trojan, your's th' Arcadian side. Dryden.

Divided interests, while thou think'st it to sway,
Draw like two brooks thy middle stream away. Dryden.

2. Any thing issuing from a head, and moving forward with continuity of parts.

The breath of the Lord is like a stream of brimstone. Isaiah.

You, Drances, never want a stream of words. Dryden.

The stream of beneficence hath, by several riva-lets which have since fallen into it, wonderfully enlarged its current. Atterbury.

3. Any thing forcible and continued.

Had their cables of iron chains had any great length, they had been unportable; and, being short, the ships must have sunk at an anchor in any stream of weather. Raleigh.

It is looked upon as an insolence for a man to adhere to his own opinion, against the current stream of antiquity. Locke.

went there were gathered people on both sides, standing in a row. Bacon.
The streets are no larger than alleys. Sandys.
When night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine;
Witness the streets of Sodom. Milton.
The Italians, say the ancients, always considered the situation of a building, whether it were high or low, in an open square, or in a narrow street, and more or less deviated from their rule of art. Addison.
When you tattle with some crony servant in the same street, leave your own street-door open. Swift.
2. Proverbially, a publick place.
That there be no leading into captivity, and no complaining in our streets. Psalms.
Our publick ways would be so crowded, that we should want street-room. Spectator.
Let us reflect upon what we daily see practised in the world; and can we believe, if an apostle of Christ appeared in our streets, he would retract his caution, and command us to be conformed to the world?
Rogers.

But strength from truth divided, and from just,
Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise. Milton.
Thou must outlive
Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change
To wither'd, weak, and grey. Milton.
Th'insulting Trojan came,
And menac'd us with force, our fleet with flame:
Was it the strength of this tongue-valiant lord,
In that black hour, that sav'd you from the sword?
Dryden.
2. Power of endurance; firmness; durability; toughness; hardness.
Not founded on the brittle strength of bones. Milton.
Firm Dorick pillars found the solid base,
The fair Corinthian crown the higher space,
And all below is strength, and all above is grace. Dryden.
3. Vigour of any kind; power of any kind.
Strength there must be either of love or war,
even such contrary ways leading to the same unity. Holyday.
God, in all things wise and just,
Hinder'd not Satan to attempt the mind
Of man, with strength entire and free-will arm'd. Milton.
This act Shall crush the strength of Satan. Milton.
4. Power of resistance; sureness; fastness.
Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn. Shakspeare.

Wings growing, and dominion given. Milton.
Adam and first matron Eve
Had ended now their orisons, and found Strength added from above, new hope to spring
Out of despair. Milton.
8. Vigour of writing; nervous diction; force, opposed to softness, in writing or painting.
Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and know
What's roundly smooth, or languishingly slow;
And praise the easy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness join. Pope.
Caracci's strength, Coreggio's softer line,
Paulo's free stroke, and Titian's warmth divine. Pope.
9. Potency of liquors.
10. Fortification; fortrefs.
The rashness of talking should not only be retarded by the guard of our heart, but fenced in by certain strengths placed in the mouth. Ben Jonson.

Plenty of mighty spirits, to strengthen his state. Daniel.
- To STRENGTHEN. v. a. [from strength.]
1. To make strong.
Authority is by nothing so much strengthened and confirmed as by custom; for no man easily distrusts the things which he and all men have been always bred up to. Temple.
Thee, bold Longinus! all the Nine inspire,
And bless your critick with a poet's fire:
An ardent judge, who, zealous in his trust,
With warmth gives sentence, yet is always just;
Whose own example strengthens all his laws,
And is himself that great sublime he draws. Pope.
If it were true that women were thus naturally vain and light, then how much more blameable is that education, which seems contrived to strengthen and increase this folly. Law.
2. To animate; to fix in resolution.
Let us rise up and build: so they strengthened their hands for this work. Nehemiah.

order, held out bravely.

Bacon.

Those that are strong at sea may easily bring them to what terms they please.

Addison.

The weak, by thinking themselves strong, are induced to proclaim war against that which ruins them; and the strong, by conceiting themselves weak, are thereby rendered as useless as if they really were so.

South.

4. Supplied with forces. It has in this sense a very particular construction. We say, a thousand strong; as we say, twenty years old, or ten yards long.

When he was not six-and-twenty strong,
Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low,
My father gave him welcome to the shore.

Shakspeare.

He was, at his rising from Exeter, between six

In choice of committees for ripening business for the council, it is better to chuse indifferent persons, than to make an indifferency by putting in those that are strong on both sides.

Bacon.

The knight is a much stronger tory in the country than in town, which is necessary for the keeping up his interest.

Addison.

9. Full; having any quality in a great degree; affecting the sight forcibly.

By mixing such powders, we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black, that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown.

Newton.

Thus shall there be made two bows of colours;
an interior and stronger by one reflexion in the drops, and an exterior and fainter by two; for the light becomes fainter by every reflexion.

To STROUT. v. n. [strussen, German.]

To swell with an appearance of greatness;
to walk with affected dignity; to strut.
This is commonly written strut, which seems more proper.

To STROUT. v. a. To swell out; to puff out; to enlarge by affectation.

I will make a brief list of the particulars in an historical truth nowise strouted, nor made greater by language.

To STROW. v. n. [See To STREW.]

1. To spread by being scattered.

Angel forms lay entranc'd,
Thick as autumnal leaves that strow the brooks
In Volambrôla.

2. To spread by scattering; to besprinkle.

All the ground
With shiver'd armour strown.
Come, shepherds, come, and strow with leaves
the plain;

Such funeral rites your Daphnis did ordain.

With osier floats the standing water strow,
With massy stones make bridges if it flow.

3. To spread.

There have been three years dearth of corn, and every place strowed with beggars.

4. To scatter; to throw at random.

Synah, can I tell thee more?

STRUCK. The old preterit and participle passive of strike.

S T R

This message bear: the Trojans and their chief Bring holy peace, and beg the king's relief;

Struck with so great a name, and all on fire,

The youth replies, whatever you require. Dryden.

In a regular plantation, I can place myself in its several centers, so as to view all the walks struck from them.

High on his car Sesostris struck my view,

Whom scepter'd slaves in golden harness drew.

Some to conceit alone their taste confine,

And glitt'ring thoughts struck out at ev'ry line,

STRU'CKEN. The old participle passive of strike.

Down fell the duke, his joints dissolv'd asunder,
Blind with the light, and strucken dead with wonder.

All liquors strucken make round circles, and dash.

Silent, and in face

Confounded, long they sat as strucken mute.

STRU'CTURE. n. f. [structure, Fr. struc-

tura, from struere, Lat.]

1. Act of building; practice of building.

His son builds on, and never is content,

Till the last farthing is in structure spent.

2. Manner of building; form; make.

Several have gone about to inform them; but, for want of insight into the structure and constitution of the terraqueous globe, have not given satisfaction.

3. Edifice; building.

mology.]

1. To labour; to act with effort.

2. To strive; to contend; to contest.

No man is guilty of an act of intemperance but he might have forborne it; not without some trouble from the strugglings of the contrary habit,

but still the thing was possible.

In the time of Henry VIII. differences of religion tore the nation into two mighty factions; and, under the name of Papist and Protestant, struggled in her bowels with many various events.

I repent, like some despairing wretch

That boldly plunges in the frightful deep,

Then pants and struggles with the whirling waves,

And catches ever slender reed to save him.

3. To labour in difficulties; to be in agonies or distress.

Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still,

Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill.

'Tis wisdom to beware,

And better shun the bait than struggle in the snare.

If men struggle through as many troubles to be miserable as to be happy, my readers may be persuaded to be good.

STRU'GGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Labour; effort.

2. Contest; contention.

When, in the division of parties, men only strove for the first place in the prince's favour, an honest man might look upon the struggle with indifference.

up blood, is produced by strumous or scrophulous humours.

STRU'MPET. n. f. [of doubtful original.

Stropo vieux mot palliardise: stuprum,
Lat.] A whore; a prostitute. Trevoux.

How like a younker or a prodigal

The skarfed bark puts from her native bay,

Hugg'd and embrac'd by the strumpet wind!

How like a prodigal doth she return,

Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the strumpet wind!

Ne'er could the strumpet,

With all her double vigour, art, and nature,

Once stir my temper; but this virtuous maid

Subdues me quite.

If to preserve this vessel for my lord

From any other foul unlawful touch,

Be not to be a strumpet, I am none.

Common fame is as false and impudent as a common strumpet.

Honour had his due;

Before the holy priest my vows were tried;

So came I not a strumpet, but a bride.

To STRU'MPET. v. a. To make a whore;

to debauch.

If we two be one, and thou play false,

I do digest the poison of thy flesh,

Being strumpeted by the contagion.

The love of gain is of an equal size.

STRUT. n. f. [from the verb.] An affectation of stateliness in the walk.

Certain gentlemen, by smirking countenances and an ungainly strut in their walk, have got preferment.

STUB. n. f. [steb, Sax. stubbe, Danish;

stob, Dutch; stip-s, Lat.]

1. A thick short stock left when the rest is cut off.

Dametas guided the horses so ill, that the wheel coming over a great stub of a tree, overturned the coach.

All about old stocks and stubs of trees,

Whereon nor fruit nor leaf was ever seen,

Did hang upon the ragged rocky knees.

To buy at the stub is the best for the buyer,

More timely provision, the cheaper is fire.

Upon cutting down of an old timber tree, the stub hath put out sometimes a tree of another kind.

We here

Live on tough roots and stubs, to thirst inur'd,

Men to much misery and hardships born.

Prickly stubs instead of trees are found,
Or woods with knots and knares deform'd and old;
Headless the most, and hideous to behold.
Dryden.

2. A log; a block.

You shall have more ado to drive our dullest and laziest youth, or stocks and stubs, from the infinite desire of such a happy nurture, than we have now to haul our choicest wits to that asinine feast of sowthistles and brambles.
Milton.

To STUB. v. a. [from the noun.] To force up; to extirpate.

His two tusks serve for fighting and feeding; by the help whereof he stubs up edible roots out of the ground, or tears off the bark of trees.
Grew.

The other tree was griev'd,
Grew scrubby, dried a-top, was stunted;
So the next parson stubb'd and burnt it.
Swift.

STU'BBED. adj. [from stub.] Truncated;
short and thick.

A pain he in his head-piece feels,
Against a stubb'd tree he reels,
And up went poor Hobgoblin's heels.

Dutch; stipula, Lat.] The stalks of corn left in the field by the reaper.

This suggested
At some time, when his soaring insolence
Shall reach the people, will be the fire
To kindle their dry stubble, and their blaze
Shall darken him for ever.
Shakespeare.

You, by thus much scene,
Know by the stubble what the corn hath bene.
Chapman.

If a small red flower in the stubble fields, called the wincope, open in the morning, be sure of a fair day.
Bacon.

His succeeding years afford him little more than the stubble of his own harvest.
Dryden.

'Thrice-happy Duck, employ'd in threshing
stubble,

Thy toil is lessen'd, and thy profits double.
After the first crop is off, they plow in the wheat stubble.
Mortimer.

STU'BBORN. adj. [This word, of which no obvious etymology appears, is derived by Minsheu from stout-born; referred by Junius to στιάβος; and deduced better by Lye, from stub, perhaps from stubb-born.]

1. Obstinate; inflexible; contumacious.

Strifeless Atin in their stubborn mind
Coals of contention and hot vengeance tin'd.
Shakespeare.

Then stood he neere the doore, and proud to draw
The stubborne bow, thrice tried, and thrice gave law.
Chapman.

The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt t' accuse it, and Disdainful to be tried by 't.
Shakespeare.

He believed he had so humbled the garrison, that they would be no longer so stubborn.
Clarendon.

I'll not flatter this tempestuous king,
But work his stubborn soul a nobler way.
Dryden.

Patience under torturing pain,
Where stubborn stocks would complain.
Swift.

5. Harsh; rough; rugged.

He will not oppose any thing that is hard and stubborn, but by a soft answer deaden their force.

6. In all its uses it commonly implies something of a bad quality, though Locke has catachrestically used it in a sense of praise.

STU'BBORNLY. adv. [from stubborn.] Obstinately; contumaciously; inflexibly.

Stubbornly he did repugn the truth,
About a certain question in the law.
Shakespeare.

He wilfully neglects his book, and stubbornly refuses any thing he can do.
Locke.

So close they cling, so stubbornly retire,
Their love's more violent than the chymist's fire.
Garth.

STU'BBORNNESS. n. f. [from stubborn.]
Obstinacy; vitious stoutness; contu-macy; inflexibility. Dryden has used it in commendation.

Happy is your grace,
That can translate the stubbornness of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a stile.
Shakespeare.

He chose a course least subject to envy, between stiff stubbornness and filthy flattery.
Hayward.

Patriots, in peace, assert the people's right,
With noble stubbornness resisting might.
Dryden.

Stubbornness, and an obstinate disobedience, must be mastered with blows.
Locke.

It failed, partly by the accident of a storm, and partly by the stubbornness or treachery of that colony for whose relief it was designed.
Swift.

STUCK. The pret. and part. pass. of stick.

What more infamous brands have records stuck upon any, than those who used the best parts for the worst ends?
Decay of Piety.

The partners of their crime will learn obedience,
When they look up and see their fellow-traitors
Stuck on a fork, and black'ning in the sun.
Addison.

When the polypus, from forth his cave
Torn with full force, reluctant beats the wave,
His ragged claws are stuck with stones and sands.
Pope.

Stuck o'er with titles, and hung round with strings,
That thou may'st be by kings, or whores of kings.
Pope.

STUCK. n. f. A thrust.

I had a pass with rapier, scabbard and all; and he gives me the stuck in with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable.
Shakespeare.

remember so weak a composition.
Shakespeare.

STU'DIER. n. f. [from study.] One who studies.

Lipius was a great studier of the stoical philosophy: upon his death-bed his friend told him, that he needed not use arguments to persuade him to patience; the philosophy which he had studied would furnish him: he answers him, Lord Jesus, give me christian patience.
Tillotson.

There is a law of nature, as intelligible to a rational creature and studier of that law, as the positive laws of commonwealths.
Locke.

STU'DIOUS. adj. [studieux, Fr. studiosus,

Placing two styles or needles of the same steel, touched with the same loadstone, when the one is removed but half a span, the other would stand like Hercules's pillars. Brown.

10. The stalk which rises from amid the leaves of a flower.

Style is the middle prominent part of the flower of a plant, which adheres to the fruit or seed: 'tis usually slender and long, whence it has its name. Quincy.

The figure of the flower-leaves, stamina, apices, style, and seed vessel. Ray.

To STYLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To call; to term; to name.

The chancellor of the exchequer they had no mind should be styled a knight. Clarendon.

Ere not that so shall end

The strife which thou call'st evil, but we style

The strife of glory. Milton.

Fortune's gifts, my actions

May style their own rewards. Denham.

Whoever backs his tenets with authorities, thinks he ought to carry the cause, and is ready to style it impudence in any one who shall stand out. Locke.

His conduct might have made him stil'd

A father, and the nymph his child. Swift.

STYPTICK. } adj. [στυπτικός; styptique,

STYPTICAL. } French. This is usually though erroneously, written stiptick.]

The same as astringent; but generally expresses the most efficacious sort of astringents, or those which are applied to stop hemorrhages. Quincy.

Fruits of trees and shrubs contain phlegm, oil, and an essential salt, by which they are sharp, sweet, sour, or styptick. Arbutnot.

There is a sour styptick salt diffused through the earth, which passing a concoction in plants, becomes milder. Brown.

From spirit of salt, carefully dephlegmed and removed into lower glasses, having gently abstracted the whole, there remained in the bottom, and the neck of the retort, a great quantity of a certain dry and styptical substance, mostly of a yellowish colour. Boyle.

In an effusion of blood, having doffs ready dipt in the royal styptick, we applied them. Wigman.

STYPTICITY. n. f. The power of stanching blood.

Cartharticks of mercurials precipitate the viscidities by their stypticity, and mix with all animal acids. Floyer.

To STY'THY. v. a. [See STITHY.] To forge on an anvil.

By the forge that styrbied Mars his helm,

I'll kill thee every where, yea, o'er and o'er. Shakspeare.

SUA'SIBLE. adj. [from suadeo, Latin.] Easy to be persuaded.

SUA'SIVE. adj. [from suadeo, Latin.]

Having power to persuade.

It had the passions in perfect subjection; and though its command over them was but suasive and political, yet it had the force of coercion, and despotical. South.

SUA'SORY. adj. [suasorius, Latin.] Having tendency to persuade.

SUA'VITY. n. f. [suavitè, French; suavitas, Latin.]

1. Sweetness to the senses.

She desired them for rarity, pulchritude, and suavity. Brown.

2. Sweetness to the mind.

SUB, in composition, signifies a subordinate degree.

SUBA'CID. adj. [sub and acidus, Latin.]

Sour in a small degree.

The juice of the stem is like the chyle in the animal body, not sufficiently concocted by circulation, and is commonly subacid in all plants. Arbutnot.

SUBA'CRID. adj. [sub and acrid.] Sharp and pungent in a small degree.

S U B

The green choler of a cow tasted sweet, bitter, subacid, or a little pungent, and turned syrup of violets green. Floyer.

To SUBACT. v. a. [subactus, Latin.] To reduce; to subdue.

Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the consort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body. Bacon.

SUBACTION. n. f. [subactus, Lat.] The act of reducing to any state, as of mixing two bodies completely, or beating any thing to a very small powder.

There are of concoction two periods: the one assimilation, or absolute conversion and subaction; the other maturation: whereof the former is most conspicuous in living creatures, in which there is an absolute conversion and assimilation of the nourishment into the body. Bacon.

SUBALTERN. adj. [subalterne, French.] Inferiour; subordinate; that in different respects is both superiour and inferiour. It is used in the army of all officers below a captain.

Love's subalterns, a duteous band,
Like watchmen round their chief appear;
Each had his lanthorn in his hand,
And Venus, mask'd, brought up the rear. Prior.

There had like to have been a duel between two subalterns, upon a dispute which should be governor of Portsmouth. Addison.

One, while a subaltern officer, was every day complaining against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, after he received his commission for a regiment, he confessed the spirit of colonelship was coming fast upon him, and it daily increased to his death. Swift.

This sort of universal ideas, which may either be considered as a genus or species, is called subaltern. Watts.

SUBALTERNATE. adj. [subalternus, Lat.] Succeeding by turns. Diſt.

SUBASTRINGENT. adj. [sub and astringent.] Astringent in a small degree.

SUBBEADLE. n. f. [sub and beadle.] An under beadle.

They ought not to execute those precepts by simple messengers, or subbeadles, but in their own persons. Ayliffe.

SUBCELESTIAL. adj. [sub and celestial.] Placed beneath the heavens.

The most refined glories of subcelestial excellencies are but more faint resemblances of these. Glanville.

SUBCHA'NTER. n. f. [sub and chanter; succentor, Latin.] The deputy of the precentor in a cathedral.

SUBCLA'VIAN. adj. [sub and clavus, Latin.]

Subclavian is applied to any thing under the arm-pit or shoulder, whether artery, nerve, vein, or muscle. Quincy.

The liver, though seated on the right side, yet, by the subclavian division, doth equi-distantly communicate its activity unto either arm. Brown.

The chyle first mixeth with the blood in the subclavian vein, and enters with it into the heart, where it is very imperfectly mixed, there being no mechanism nor fermentation to convert it into blood, which is effected by the lungs. Arbutnot.

SUBCONSTELLATION. n. f. [sub and constellation.] A subordinate and secondary constellation.

As to the picture of the seven stars, if thereby be meant the Pleiades, or subconstellation upon the back of Taurus, with what congruity they are described, in a clear night an ordinary eye may discover. Brown.

SUBCONTRARY. adj. [sub and contrary.] Contrary in an inferiour degree.

If two particular propositions differ in quality, they are subcontraries; as, some vine is a tree; some vine is not a tree. These may be both true together, but they can never be both false. Watts.

S U B

SUBCONTRACTED. part. adj. [sub and contracted.] Contracted after a former contract.

Your claim,
I bar it in the interest of my wife;
'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord,
And I her husband contradict your banes. Shaksp.

SUBCUTANEUS. adj. [sub and cutaneous.] Lying under the skin.

SUBDEACON. n. f. [subdiaconus, Latin.] In the Romish church they have a subdeacon, who is the deacon's servant. Ayliffe.

SUBDEAN. n. f. [subdecanus, Latin.] The vicegerent of a dean.

Whenever the dean and chapter confirm any act, that such confirmation may be valid, the dean must join in person, and not in the person of a deputy or subdean only. Ayliffe.

SUBDECUPLE. adj. [sub and decuplus, Latin.] Containing one part of ten.

SUBDERISORIOUS. adj. [sub and derisor.] Scoffing or ridiculing with tenderness and delicacy. Not used.

This subderisorious mirth is far from giving any offence to us: it is rather a pleasant condiment of our conversation. More.

SUBDITI'TIOUS. adj. [subditi'tius, Lat.] Put secretly in the place of something else.

To SUBDIVERSIFY. v. a. [sub and diversify.] To diversify again what is already diversified.

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into arras; and these variously subdiversified according to the fancy of the artificer. Hale.

To SUBDIVIDE. v. a. [subdiviser, Fr. sub and divide.] To divide a part into yet more parts.

In the rise of eight, in tones, there be two be-mols, or half notes; so as if you divide the tones equally, the eight is but seven whole and equal notes; and if you subdivide that into half notes, as in the stops of a lute, it maketh the number thirteen. Bacon.

When Brutus and Cassius were overthrown, soon after Antonius and Octavianus brake and subdivided. Bacon.

The glad father glories in his child,
When he can subdivide a fraction. Roscommon.

When the progenies of Cham and Japhet swarmed into colonies, and those colonies were subdivided into many others, in time their descendants lost the primitive rites of divine worship, retaining only the notion of one deity. Dryden.

SUBDIVISION. n. f. [subdivison, French; from subdivide.]

1. The act of subdividing.

When any of the parts of any idea are farther divided, in order to a clear explication of the whole, this is called a subdivision; as when a year is divided into months, each month into days, and each day into hours, which may be farther subdivided into minutes and seconds. Watts.

2. The parts distinguished by a second division.

How can we see such a multitude of souls cast under so many subdivisions of misery, without reflecting on the absurdity of a government that sacrifices the happiness of so many reasonable beings to the glory of one? Addison.

In the decimal table the subdivisions of the cubit, as span, palm, and digit, are deduced from the shorter cubit. Arbutnot.

SUBDOLOUS. adj. [subdolos, Latin.] Cunning; subtle; sly.

To SUBDUCE. v. a. [subduco, subduetus, Latin.]

1. To withdraw; to take away.

Or nature fail'd in me, and left some part
No proof enough such object to sustain;
Or, from my side subducing, took perhaps More than enough. Milton.

S U B

2. To subtract by arithmetical operation.

Take the other operation of arithmetick, subduction; if out of that supposed infinite multitude of antecedent generations we should subduce ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before, and yet still the quotient must be infinite. Hale.

SUBDUCTION. n. f. [from subduct.]

1. The act of taking away.

Possibly the Divine beneficence subducing that influence which it communicated from the time of their first creation, they were kept in a state of immortality till that moment of the subduction. Hale.

2. Arithmetical subtraction.

Suppose we take the other operation of arithmetick, subduction: if out of that infinite multitude of antecedent generations we should subduce ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before that subduction, and yet still the quotient be infinite. Hale.

To SUBDU'E. v. a. [from subdo, or subjugo, Latin.]

1. To crush; to oppress; to sink; to overpower.

Nothing could have subdued nature
To such a lowness, but his unkind daughters. Shakspere.

Them that rose up against me hast thou subdued under me. 2 Samuel.

If aught were worthy to subdue
The soul of man. Milton.

2. To conquer; to reduce under a new dominion.

Be fruitful and replenish the earth, and subdue it. Genesis.

Augustus Cæsar subdued Egypt to the Roman empire. Peacham.

To overcome in battle, and subdue
Nations, and bring home spoils. Milton.

The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdued the world. Spratt.

3. To tame; to subact; to break.

Nor is't unwholesome to subdue the land

By often exercise; and where before
You broke the earth, again to plow. May.

SUBDU'EMENT. n. f. [from subdue.] Conquest. Not used, nor worthy to be used.

I have seen thee,
As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed
Bravely despising forfeits and subduements. Shaksp.

SUBDU'ER. n. f. [from subdue.] Conqueror; tamer.

Great god of might, that reigneth in the mind,
And all the body to thy heft dost frame;
Victor of gods, subducer of mankind,
That dost the lion and fell tiger tame,
Who can express the glory of thy might? Spenser.

Their curious eye
Discerns their great subducer's awful mien
And corresponding features fair. Philips.

Figs are great subducers of acrimony, useful in hoariness and coughs, and extremely emollient. Arbutnot.

SUBDU'PLE. adj. [subduple, Fr.

SUBDUPLICATE. adj. [sub and duple, Lat.]

Containing one part of two.

As one of these under pulleys doth abate half of that heaviness which the weight hath in itself, and cause the power to be in a subduple proportion unto it, so two of them do abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, and three a subsextuple. Wilkins.

The motion, generated by the forces in the whole passage of the body or thing through that space, shall be in a subduplicate proportion of the forces. Newton.

SUBJA'CENT. adj. [subjacens, Lat.] Lying under.

The superficial parts of mountains are washed away by rains, and borne down upon the subjacent plains. Woodward.

To SUBJE'CT. v. a. [subjectus, Lat.]

1. To put under.

The angel
Led them direct, and down the cliff as fast
To the subjected plain. Milton.

The medal bears each form and name:
In one short view, subjected to our eye,
Gods, emperors, heroes, sages, beauties lie. Pope.
2. To reduce to submission; to make subordinate; to make submissive.

Think not, young warriors, your diminish'd name
Shall lose of lustre, by subjecting rage
To the cool dictates of experienc'd age. Dryden.

3. To enslave; to make obnoxious.
I live on bread like you, feel want like you,
Taste grief, need friends, like you; subjected thus,
How can you say to me I am a king? Shakspeare.
I see thee, in that fatal hour,
Subjected to the victor's cruel pow'r,
Led hence a slave. Dryden.

The blind will always be led by those that see, or fall into the ditch; and he is the most subjected,
the most enslaved, who is so in his understanding. Locke.

4. To expose; to make liable.
If the vessels yield, it subjects the person to all the inconveniencies of an erroneous circulation. Arbutnot.

5. To submit; to make accountable.
God is not bound to subject his ways of operation to the scrutiny of our thoughts, and confine himself to do nothing but what we must comprehend. Locke.

6. To make subservient.
He subjected to man's service angel wings. Milt.
SUBJECT. adj. [subjectus, Latin.]

1. Placed or situate under.
Th' eastern tower,
Whose height commands, as subject, all the vale
To see the sight. Shakspeare.

2. Living under the dominion of another.
Esau was never subject to Jacob, but founded a distinct people and government, and was himself prince over them. Locke.

Christ, since his incarnation, has been subject to the Father; and will be so also in his human capacity, after he has delivered up his mediatorial kingdom. Waterland.

3. Exposed; liable; obnoxious.
Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds;
And he the noble image of my youth
Is overspread with them. Shakspeare.
All human things are subject to decay;
And when fate summons monarchs must obey. Dryden.

4. Being that on which any action operates, whether intellectual or material.
I enter into the subject matter of my discourse. Dryden.

SUBJECT. n. f. [subjet, French.]
1. One who lives under the dominion of another: opposed to governour.

Every subject's duty is the king's,
But every subject's soul is his own. Shakspeare.
Never subject long'd to be a king,
As I do long and wish to be a subject. Shakspeare.
Those I call subjects which are governed by the ordinary laws and magistrates of the sovereign. Durvet.

We must understand and confess a king to be a father, a subject to be a son; and therefore honour to be by nature most due from the natural subject to the natural king. Holiday.

The subject must obey his prince, because God commands it, human laws require it. Swift.

Were subjects so but only by their choice,
And not from birth did forc'd dominion take,
Our prince alone would have the public voice. Dryd.

Heroick kings, whose high perfections have made them awful to their subjects, can struggle with and subdue the corruption of the times. Davenant.

2. That on which any operation, either mental or material, is performed.

Now spurs the lated traveller apace
To gain the timely inn, and near approaches
The subject of our watch. Shakspeare.

This subject for heroick song pleased me. Milton.
Here he would have us fix our thoughts; nor are they too dry a subject for our contemplation. Decay of Piety.

I will not venture on so nice a subject with my severe style. More.

Make choice of a subject beautiful and noble, which, being capable of all the graces that colours and elegance of design can give, shall afford a perfect art an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate. Dryden.

The subject of a proposition is that concerning which any thing is affirmed or denied. Watts.

My real design is, that of publishing your praises to the world; not upon the subject of your noble birth. Swift.

3. That in which any thing inheres or exists.

Anger is certainly a kind of baseness, as it appears well in the weakness of those subjects in whom it reigns, children, women, old folks, sick folks. Bacon.

4. [In grammar.] The nominative case to a verb is called by grammarians the subject of the verb. Clarke.

SUBJECTION. n. f. [from subject.]

1. The act of subduing.

After the conquest of the kingdom, and subjection of the rebels, enquiry was made who there were,
that, fighting against the king, had saved themselves
by flight. Hale.

2. [subjection, French.] The state of being under government.

Because the subjection of the body to the will is by natural necessity, the subjection of the will unto God voluntary, we therefore stand in need of direction after what sort our wills and desires may be rightly conformed to his. Hooker.

How hard it is now for him to frame himself to subjection, that, having once set before his eyes the hope of a kingdom, hath found encouragement. Spenser.

Both in subjection now to sensual appetite. Milt.
SUBJECTIVE. adj. [from subject.] Relating not to the object, but the subject.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective: objective is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. Watts.

SUBINGRESSION. n. f. [sub and ingressus, Latin.] Secret entrance.

The pressure of the ambient air is strengthened upon the accession of the air sucked out; which forceth the neighbouring air to a violent subingression of its parts. Boyle.

TO SUBJOIN. v. a. [sub and joindre, Fr.
subjungo, Latin.] To add at the end;
to add afterward.

He makes an excuse from ignorance, the only thing that could take away the fault; namely, that he knew not that he was the high-priest, and sub- joins a reason. South.

SUBITANEOUS. adj. [subitaneus, Lat.]
Sudden; hasty.

TO SUBJUGATE. v. a. [subjuguere, Fr.
subjugo, Lat.] To conquer; to subdue;
to bring under dominion by force.

O fair virgin, that hast warm'd the breast
Whose sov'reign dictates subjugate the east! Prior.
He subjugated a king, and called him his vassal. Baker.

SUBJUGATION. n. f. [from subjugate.]
The act of subduing.

This was the condition of the learned part of the world, after their subjugation by the Turks. Hale.

SUBJUNCTION. n. f. [from subjungo, Latin.] The state of being subjoined;
the act of subjoining.

The verb undergoes in Greek a different formation; and in dependence upon, or subjunction to, some other verb. Clarke.

SUBJUNCTIVE. adj. [subjunctivus, Lat.
subjunctif, French.]

1. Subjoined to something else.
2. In grammar,

The verb undergoes a different formation, to fignify the same intentions as the indicative, yet not absolutely, but relatively to some other verb, which is called the subjunctive mood. Clarke.

SUBLAPSARIAN. } adj. [sub and lapsus, SUBLAPSARY. } Latin.] Done after the fall of man.

The degree of reprobation, according to the sub- lapsarian doctrine, being nothing else but a mere preterition or non-election of some persons whom God left as he found, involved in the guilt of the first Adam's transgression, without any actual personal sin of their own, when he withdrew some others as guilty as they. Hammond.

SUBLATION. n. f. [sublatio, Latin.]
The act of taking away.

SUBLEVATION. n. f. [sublevo, Latin.]
The act of raising on high.

SUBLIMABLE. adj. [from sublime.] Possible to be sublimed.

SUBLIMABLENESS. n. f. [from sublima- ble.] Quality of admitting sublimation.

He obtained another concrete as to taste and smell, and easy sublimableness, as common salt armoniac. Boyle.

TO SUBLIMATE. v. a. [from sublime.]

1. To raise by the force of chymical fire.

2. To exalt; to heighten; to elevate.
And as his actions rose, so raise they still their vein

In words, whose weight best suits a sublimated strain. Drayton.

Not only the gross and illiterate souls, but the most aerial and sublimated, are rather the more proper fuel for an immaterial fire. Decay of Piety.

The precepts of christianity are so excellent and refined, and so apt to cleanse and sublimate the more gross and corrupt, as shews flesh and blood never revealed it. Decay of Piety.

SUBLIMATE. n. f. [from sublime.]

1. Any thing raised by fire in the retort.

Enquire the manner of subliming, and what metals endure subliming, and what body the sublimate makes. Bacon.

2. Quicksilver raised in the retort.

SUBLIMATE. adj. Raised by fire in the vessel.

The particles of mercury, uniting with the acid particles of spirit of salt, compose mercury sublimate;
and, with the particles of sulphur, cinnabar. Newton.

SUBLIMATION. n. f. [sublimation, Fr.
from sublimate.]

1. A chymical operation which raises bodies in the vessel by the force of fire.

Sublimation differs very little from distillation, excepting that in distillation only the fluid parts of bodies are raised, but in this the solid and dry; and that the matter to be distilled may be either solid or fluid, but sublimation is only concerned about solid substances. There is also another difference, namely, that rarefaction, which is of very great use in distillation, has hardly any room in sublimation; for the substances which are to be sublimed, being solid, are incapable of rarefaction; and so it is only impulse that can raise them. Quincy.

Separation is wrought by weight, as in the settlement of liquors, by heat, by precipitation, or subli- mation; that is, a calling of the several parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon.

Since oil of sulphur per campanam is of the same nature with oil of vitriol, may it not be inferred that sulphur is a mixture of volatile and fixed parts, so strongly cohering by attraction, as to ascend together by sublimation? Newton.

2. Exaltation; elevation; act of heightening or improving.

She turns
Bodies to spirits, by sublimation strange. Davies.
Shall he pretend to religious attainments, who is defective and short in moral, which are but the rudiments and first draught of religion, as religion is the perfection, refinement, and sublimation of morality? South.

SUBLIME. adj. [sublimis, Latin.]

1. High in place; exalted aloft.

They sum'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublime
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton.

Sublime on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd,
And dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward. Dryden.

2. High in excellence; exalted by nature.

My earthly strain'd to the height
In that celestial colloquy sublime. Milton.

Can it be, that souls sublime
Return to visit our terrestrial clime?
And that the gen'rous mind, releas'd by death,
Can covet lazy limbs? Dryden.

3. High in style or sentiment; lofty; grand.

Easy in stile thy work, in sense sublime. Prior.

4. Elevated by joy.

All yet left of that revolted rout,
Heav'n-fall'n, in station stood or just array,
Sublime with expectation. Milton.

Their hearts were jocund and sublime,
Drunk with idolatry, drunk with wine. Milton.

5. Lofty of mien; elevated in manner.

He was sublime, and almost tumorous, in his looks and gestures. Wotton.

His fair large front and eye sublime declar'd Absolute rule. Milton.

SUBLIME. n. s. The grand or lofty style.

The sublime is a gallicism, but how naturalized.

Longinus strengthens all his laws,
And is himself the great sublime he draws. Pope.

The sublime rises from the nobleness of thoughts, the magnificence of the words, or the harmonious and lively turn of the phrase; the perfect sublime arises from all three together. Addison.

To SUBLIME. v. a. [sublimar, French; from the adjective.]

1. To raise by a chymical fire.

Study our manuscripts, those myriads
Of letters, which have past 'twixt thee and me;
Thence write our annals, and in them lessons be
To all, whom love's subliming fire invades. Donne.

2. To raise on high.

Although thy trunk be neither large nor strong,
Nor can thy head, not help'd, itself sublime,
Yet, like a serpent, a tall tree can climb. Denham.

3. To exalt; to heighten; to improve.

Flow'rs, and then fruit,
Man's nourishment, by gradual scale sublim'd,
To vital spirits aspire. Milton.

The fancies of most are moved by the inward springs of the corporeal machine, which, even in the most sublimed intellectuals, is dangerously influential. Glanville.

Art, being strengthened by the knowledge of things, may pass into nature by slow degrees, and so be sublimed into a pure genius, which is capable of distinguishing betwixt the beauties of nature, and that which is low in her. Dryden.

Meanly they seek the blessing to confine,
And force that sun but on a part to shine;
Which not alone the southern wit sublimes,
But ripens spirits in cold northern climes. Pope.

To SUBLIME. v. n. To rise in the chymical vessel by the force of fire.

The particles of sal ammoniac in sublimation carry up the particles of antimony, which will not sublime alone. Newton.

This salt is fixed in a gentle fire, and sublimes in a great one. Arbutnot.

SUBLIMELY. adv. [from sublime.] Loftily; grandly.

In English lays, and all sublimely great,
Thy Homer charms with all his ancient heat. Parnell.

Fustian's so sublimely bad.
It is not poetry, but prose run mad. Pope.

SUBLIMENESS. n. s. [sublimitas, Lat.]

The same as sublimity.

SUBLIMITY. n. s. [from sublime; subli- mité, French; sublimitas, Latin.]

1. Height of place; local elevation.

2. Height of nature; excellence.

As religion looketh upon him who in majesty and power is infinite, as we ought we account not of it, unless we esteem it even according to that very height of excellency which our hearts conceive, when divine sublimity itself is rightly considered. Hooker.

In respect of God's incomprehensible sublimity and purity, this is also true, that God is neither a mind nor a spirit like other spirits, nor a light such as can be discerned. Raleigh.

3. Loftiness of style or sentiment.

Milton's distinguishing excellence lies in the sub- limity of his thoughts, in the greatness of which he triumphs over all the poets, modern and ancient, Homer only excepted. Addison.

SUBLINGUAL. adj. [sublingual, French; sub and lingua, Latin.] Placed under the tongue.

Those subliming humours should be intercepted, before they mount to the head, by sublingual pills. Harvey.

SUBLUNAR. } adj. [sublunaire, French; sub SUBLUNARY. } and luna, Latin.]

Situate beneath the moon; earthly; terrestrial; of this world.

Dull sublunary lovers! love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.

Night measur'd, with her shadowy cone,
Half way up hill this vast sublunary vault. Milton.

Through seas of knowledge we our course advance,
Discovering still new worlds of ignorance;
And these discoveries make us all confess
That sublunary science is but guess. Denham.

The celestial bodies above the moon, being not subject to chance, remain in perpetual order, while all things sublunary are subject to change. Dryden.

Ovid had warn'd her to beware
Of strolling gods, whose usual trade is,
Under pretence of taking air,
To pick up sublunary ladies. Swift.

The fair philosopher to Rowley flies,
Where in a box the whole creation lies;
She sees the planets in their turns advance,
And scorns, Poitier, this sublunary dance. Young.

SUBMARINE. adj. [sub and mare, Lat.]

Lying or acting under the sea.

This contrivance may seem difficult, because these submarine navigators will want winds and tides for motion, and the sight of the heavens for direction. Wilkins.

Not only the herbaceous and woody submarine plants, but also the lithophyta, affect this manner of growing, as I observed in corals. Ray.

To SUBMERGE. v. a. [submerger, Fr. sub- mergo, Latin.] To drown; to put under water.

So half my Egypt was submerg'd, and made
A cistern for scald snakes. Shakspeare.

SUBMERSION. n. s. [submerfion, French; from submersus, Latin.] The act of drowning; state of being drowned.

The great Atlantick island is mentioned in Plato's Timæus, almost contiguous to the western parts of Spain and Africa, yet wholly swallowed up by that ocean; which, if true, might afford a passage from Africa to America by land before that submerfion. Hale.

To SUBMINISTER. } v. a. [subministro, To SUBMINISTRATE. } Lat.] To supply; to afford. Not much in use.

Some things have been discovered, not only by the industry of mankind, but even the inferior animals have subministered unto man the invention of many things, natural, artificial, and medicinal. Hale.

Nothing subministrates apter matter to be converted into pestilent seminaries, than streams of nasty folks. Harvey.

To SUBMINISTER. v. n. To subserve;
to be useful to.

Passions, as fire and water, are good servants, but bad masters, and subminister to the best and worst purposes. L'Estrange.

SUBMISS. adj. [from submissus, Latin.]

Humble; submissive; obsequious.

King James, mollified by the bishop's submiss and eloquent letters, wrote back, that though he were in part moved by his letters, yet he should not be fully satisfied except he spake with him. Bacon.

Nearer his presence, Adam, though not aw'd,
Yet with submiss approach, and reverence meek,
As to a superior nature, bowed low. Milton.

Rejoicing, but with awe,
In adoration at his feet I fell Submiss: he rear'd me. Milton.

SUBMISSION. n. s. [soumission, French; submissus, Latin.]

1. Delivery of himself to the power of another.

Submission, dauphin! 'tis a mere French word;
We English warriors wot not what it means. Shakspeare.

2. Acknowledgment of inferiority or dependance; humble or suppliant behaviour.

In all submission and humility
York doth present himself unto your highness. Shakspeare.

Great prince, by that submission you'll gain more Than e'er your haughty courage won before. Halifax.

3. Acknowledgment of a fault; confession of error.

Be not as extreme in submission, as in offence. Shakspeare.

4. Obsequiousness; resignation; obedience.

No duty in religion is more justly required by God Almighty, than a perfect submission to his will in all things. Temple.

SUBMISSIVE. adj. [submissus, Latin.]

Humble; testifying submission or inferiority.

On what submissive message art thou sent? Shakspeare.

Her at his feet submissive in distress
He thus with peaceful words uprais'd. Milton.

Sudden from the golden throne
With a submissive step I halted down;
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

SUBMISSIVELY. adv. [from submissive.]

Humbly; with confession of inferiority.

The goddess,
Soft in her tone, submissively replies. Dryden.

But speech ev'n there submissively withdraws
From rights of subjects, and the poor man's cause;
Then pompous silence reigns, and stills the noisy laws. Pope.

SUBMISSIVENESS. n. s. [from submissive.]

Humility; confession of fault or inferiority.

If thou sin in wine and wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
Fratly gets pardon by submissiveness,
But he that boasts shuts that out of his story;
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his poor clod of earth, the spacious sky. Herbert.

SUBMISSLY. adv. [from submiss.] Humbly; with submission.

Humility consists, not in wearing mean clothes, and going softly and submissly, but in mean opinion of thyself. Taylor.

To SUBMIT. v. a. [soumettre, French; submitto, Latin.]

1. To let down; to sink.

Sometimes the hill submits itself a while
In small descents, which do its height beguile;
And sometimes mounts, but so as billows play,
Whole rise not hinders but makes short our way. Dryden.

Neptune stood,
With all his hots of waters at command,
Beneath them to submit th' officious flood,
And with his trident thov'd them off the sand. Dryden.

2. To subject; to resign without resistance to authority.

Return to thy mistress, and submit thyself under her hands. Genesis.

Christian people submit themselves to conformable observance of the lawful and religious constitutions of their spiritual rulers. White.

Will ye submit your neck, and chuse to bend the supple knee? Milton.

3. To leave to discretion; to refer to judgment.

Whether the condition of the clergy be able to bear a heavy burden, is submitted to the house. Swift.

To SUBMIT. v. n. To be subject; to acquiesce in the authority of another; to yield.

To thy husband's will Thine shall submit: he over thee shall rule. Milton.

Our religion requires from us, not only to forego pleasure, but to submit to pain, disgrace, and even death. Rogers.

SUBMULTIPLE. n. s. A submultiple number or quantity is that which is contained in another number a certain number of times exactly: thus 3 is submultiple of 21, as being contained in it seven times exactly. Harris.

SUBOCTAVE. } adj. [sub and octavus, SUBOCTUPLE. } Latin; and octuple.]
Containing one part of eight.

As one of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness of the weight, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion; so two of them abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, three a subsextuple, four a suboctuple. Wilkins.

Had they erected the cube of a foot for their principal concave, and geometrically taken its suboctave, the congius, from the cube of half a foot, they would have divided the congius into eight parts, each of which would have been regularly the cube of a quarter foot, their well-known palm; this is the course taken for our gallon, which has the pint for its suboctave. Arbutnot.

SUBORDINACY. } n. s. [from subordi- SUBORDINANCY. } nate. Subordinacy is the proper and analogical word.]

1. The state of being subject.

Pursuing the imagination through all its extravagancies, is no improper method of correcting, and bringing it to act in subordinacy to reason. Spectator.

2. Series of subordination.

The subordinacy of the government changing hands so often, makes an unsteadiness in the pursuit of the publick interests. Temple.

SUBORDINATE. adj. [sub and ordinatus, Latin.]

1. Inferiour in order, in nature, in dignity or power.

It was subordinate, not enslaved, to the understanding; not as a servant to a master, but as a queen to her king, who acknowledges a subjection, yet retains a majesty. South.

Whether dark prefaces of the night proceed from any latent power of the soul during her abstraction, or from any operation of subordinate spirits, has been a dispute. Addison.

2. Descending in a regular series.

The two armies were assigned to the leading of two generals, rather courtiers than martial men, yet assisted with subordinate commanders of great experience. Bacon.

His next subordinate Awak'ning, thus to him in secret spake. Milton.

These carry such plain characters of disagreement or affinity, that the several kinds and subordinate species of each are easily distinguished. Woodward.

To SUBORDINATE. v. a. [sub and ordino, Latin.] To range under another. Not in use, but proper and elegant.

If I have subordinated picture and sculpture to architecture, as their mistress, so there are other inferior arts subordinate to them. Wotton.

SUBORDINATELY. adv. [from subordinate.] In a series regularly descending.

It being the highest step of ill, to which all others *subordinate*ly tend, one would think it could be capable of no improvement. Decay of Piety.

SUBORDINATION. n. s. [subordination, Fr. from subordinate.]

1. The state of being inferiour to another.

Nor can a council national decide,
But with subordination to her guide. Dryden.

2. A series regularly descending.

The natural creatures having a local subordination, the rational having a political, and sometimes a sacred. Holiday.

3. Place of rank.

If we would suppose a ministry where every single person was of distinguished piety, and all great officers of state and law diligent in chusing persons who in their several subordinations would be obliged to follow the examples of their superiors, the empire of irreligion would be soon destroyed. Swift.

To SUBORN. v. a. [suborner, Fr. suborno, Latin.]

1. To procure privately; to procure by secret collusion.

His judges were the self-same men by whom his accusers were suborned. Hooker.

Fond wretch! thou know'st not what thou speak'st,
Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour

In hateful practice. Shakspeare.

Reason may meet
Some specious object, by the foe suborn'd,
And fall into deception. Milton.

His artful bosom heaves dissembled sighs;
And tears suborn'd fall dropping from his eyes. Prior.

2. To procure by indirect means.

Behold
Those who by ling'ring sickness lose their breath,
And those who by despair suborn their death. Dryden.

SUBORNATION. n. s. [subornation, Fr. from suborn.] The crime of procuring any to do a bad action.

Thomas earl of Desmond was through false subornation of the queen of Edward IV. brought to his death at Tredah most unjustly. Spenser.

You set the crown
Upon the head of this forgetful man,
And for his sake wear the detested blot
Of murder'ous subornation. Shakspeare.

The fear of punishment in this life will preserve men from few vices, since some of the blackest often prove the surest steps to favour; such as ingratitude, hypocrisy, treachery, and subornation. Swift.

SUBORNER. n. s. [suborneur, Fr. from suborn.] One that procures a bad action to be done.

SUBPOENA. n. s. [sub and pœna, Latin.] A writ commanding attendance in a court, under a penalty.

SUBQUADRUPLE. adj. [sub and quadruple.] Containing one part of four.

As one of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness the weight hath in itself, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion unto it, so two of them abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion. Wilkins.

SUBQUINTUPLE. adj. [sub and quintuple.] Containing one part of five.

If unto the lower pulley there were added another, then the power would be unto the weight in a subquintuple proportion. Wilkins.

SUBRECTOR. n. s. [sub and rector.] The rector's vicegerent.

He was chosen subrektor of the college. Walton.

SUBREPTION. n. s. [subreption, Fr. subreptus, Latin.] The act of obtaining a favour by surprise or unfair representation. Diſt.

SUBREPTITIOUS. adj. [surreptice, Fr. surreptitius, Latin.] Fraudulently obtained from a superiour, by concealing some truth which would have prevented the grant. Bailey.

To SUBROGATE. v. a. [subrogo, Latin.]

See SURROGATE.

To SUBSCRIBE. v. a. [souscrire, Fr. subseribo, Latin.]

1. To give consent to, by underwriting the name.

They united by subscribing a covenant, which they pretended to be no other than had been subscribed in the reign of king James, and that his majesty himself had subscribed it; by which imposition people of all degrees engaged themselves in it. Clarendon.

The reader sees the names of those persons by whom this letter is subscribed. Addison.

2. To attest by writing the name.

Their particular testimony ought to be better credited, than some other subscribed with an hundred hands. Whitgift.

3. To submit. Not used.

The king gone to-night! subscrib'd his pow'r!
Confin'd to exhibition! all is gone. Shakspeare.

To SUBSCRIBE. v. n.

1. To give consent.

Ofius, with whose hand the Nicene creed was set down, and framed for the whole christian world to subscribe unto, so far yielded in the end, as even with the same hand to ratify the Arians confession. Hooker.

Advise thee what is to be done,
And we will all subscribe to thy advice. Shakspeare.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou shouldst have said, Go, porter, turn the key,
All cruels else subscrib'd. Shakspeare.

So spake much humbled Eve; but fate
Subscrib'd not: nature first gave signs, impress'd
On bird, beast, air. Milton.

2. To promise a stipulated sum for the promotion of any undertaking.

SUBSCRIBER. n. s. [from subscriptio, Latin.]

1. One who subscribes.

2. One who contributes to any undertaking.

Let a pamphlet come out upon a demand in a proper juncture, every one of the party who can spare a shilling shall be a subscriber. Swift.

SUBSCRIPTION. n. s. [from subscriptio, Latin.]

1. Any thing underwritten.

The man asked, Are ye christians? We answered we were; fearing the less because of the cross we had seen in the subscription. Bacon.

2. Consent or attestation given by underwriting the name.

3. The act or state of contributing to any undertaking.

The work he plied;

Stocks and subscriptions pour on ev'ry side. Pope.

South-sea subscriptions take who please,

Leave me but liberty. Pope.

4. Submission; obedience. Not in use.

I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness;
I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children;
You owe me no subscription. Shakspeare.

SUBSECTION. n. s. [sub and sectio, Latin.]

A subdivision of a larger section into a lesser; section of a section. Diſt.

SUBSECTIVE. adj. [from subsequor, Latin.] Following in train.

SUBSEPTUPLE. adj. [sub and septuplus, Latin.] Containing one of seven parts.

If unto this lower pulley there were added another, then the power would be unto the weight in a subsextuple proportion; if a third, a subseptuple. Wilkins.

SUBSEQUENCE. n. s. [from subsequor, Latin.] The state of following; not precedence.

By this faculty we can take notice of the order of precedence and subsequence in which they are past. Grew.

SUBSEQUENT. adj. [subsequent, Fr. subsequens, Lat.] This word is improperly pronounced long in the second syllable by Shakspeare.] Following in train; not preceding.

In such indexes, although small pricks
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come, at large. Shakspeare.
The subsequent words come on before the preceden' vanish. Bacon.

Why does each consenting sign
With prudent harmony combine
In turns to move, and subsequent appear
To gird the globe and regulate the year? Prior.

This article is introduced as subsequent to the treaty of Munster, made about 1648, when England was in the utmost confusion. Swift.

SUBSEQUENTLY. adv. [from subsequent.]
Not so as to go before; so as to follow in train.

To men in governing most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends; but they are forced to comply subsequently, and to strike in with things as they fall out, by postliminious after-applications of them to their purposes. South.

TO SUBSERVE. v. a. [subservio, Lat.]
To serve in subordination; to serve instrumentally.

Not made to rule,
But to subserve where wisdom bears command. Milton.

It is a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glanville.

The memory hath no special part of the brain devoted to its own service, but uses all those parts which subserve our sensations, as well as our thinking powers. Walsh.

SUBSERVIENCE. } n. s. [from subserve.]
SUBSERVIENCY. } Instrumental fitness, use, or operation.

Wicked spirits may by their cunning carry farther in a seeming confederacy or subserviency to the designs of a good angel. Dryden.

There is an immediate and agill subserviency of the spirits to the empire of the soul. Hale.

We cannot look upon the body, wherein appears so much fitness, use, and subserviency to infinite functions, any otherwise than as the effect of contrivance. Bentley.

There is a regular subordination and subserviency
among all the parts to beneficial ends. Cheyne.

SUBSERVIENT. adj. [subserviens, Lat.]
Subordinate; instrumentally useful.

Hammond had an incredible dexterity, scarce ever reading any thing which he did not make subservient in one kind or other. Pell.

Philosophers and common heathens believed one God, to whom all things were referred; but under this God they worshipped many inferior and subservient gods. Stillingfleet.

These ranks of creatures are subservient one to another, and the most of them serviceable to man.
Ray.

While awake, we feel none of those motions continually made in the disposal of the corporeal principles subservient herein. Grew.

Sense is subservient unto fancy, fancy unto intellect. Grew.

We are not to consider the world as the body of God; he is an uniform being, void of organs, members, or parts; and they are his creatures, subordinate to him, and subservient to his will. Newton.

Most critics, fond of some subservient art,
Still make the whole depend upon a part;
They talk of principles, but notions prize,
And all to one lov'd folly sacrifice. Pope.

SUBSEXTRIPLE. adj. [sub and sextuplus,
Lat.] Containing one part of six.

One of these under pullies abates half of that heaviness the weight hath, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion unto it, two of them a subquadruple proportion, three a subsextuple.
Wilkins.

TO SUBSIDE. v. n. [subsido, Lat.] To sink; to tend downward. It is commonly used of one part of a compound, sinking in the whole. Pope has used it rather improperly.

He shook the sacred honours of his head,
With terror trembled heav'n's subsiding hill,
And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill.
Dryden.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air,
Weights the men's wits against the lady's hair:
The doubtful beam long nods from side to side;
At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside.
Pope.

SUBSIDENCE. } n. s. [from subsido.]
SUBSIDENCY. } act of sinking; tendency downward.

This gradual subsidence of the abyss would take up a considerable time. Burnet.

This miscellany of bodies being determined to subsidence merely by their different specifick gravities, all those which had the same gravity subsided at the same time. Woodward.

By the alternate motion of those air bladders, whose surfaces are by turns freed from mutual contact, and by a sudden subsidence meet again by the ingress and egress of the air, the liquor is still farther attenuated. Arbutnot.

SUBSIDIARY. adj. [subsidiare, Fr. sub-sidiarius, Lat. from subsidiy] Assistant;
brought in aid.

Bitter substances burn the blood, and are a sort of subsidiary gall. Arbutnot.

SUBSIDY. n. s. [subsido, Fr. subsidium, Lat.] Aid, commonly such as is given in money.

They advised the king to send speedy aids, and with much alacrity granted a great rate of subsidy.
Bacon.

'Tis all the subsidy the present age can raise.
Dryden.

It is a celebrated notion of a patriot, that a house of commons should never grant such subsidies as give no pain to the people, lest the nation should acquiesce under a burden they did not feel. Addison.

TO SUBSIGN. v. a. [subsigno, Lat.] To sign under.

Neither have they seen any deed, before the conquest, but subsigned with crosses and single names without surnames. Camden.

TO SUBSIST. v. n. [subsister, Fr. subsisto,
Latin.]

1. To be; to have existence.
2. To continue; to retain the present state or condition.

Firm we subsist, but possible to swerve. Milton.
The very foundation was removed, and it was a moral impossibility that the republick could subsist any longer. Swift.

3. To have means of living; to be maintained.

He shone so powerfully upon me, that, like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate; and gave me wherewithal to subsist in the long winter which succeeded. Dryden.

Let us remember those that want necessities, as we ourselves should have desired to be remembered, had it been our sad lot to subsist on other men's charity. Atterbury.

4. To inhere; to have existence by means of something else.

Though the general natures of these qualities are sufficiently distant from one another, yet when they come to subsist in particulars, and to be clothed with several accidents, then the discernment is not so easy. South.

SUBSISTENCE or SUBSISTENCY. n. s.
[subsistence, Fr. from subsist.]

1. Real being.
The flesh, and the conjunction of the flesh with God, began both at one instant; his making and taking to himself our flesh was but one act; so that in Christ there is no personal subsistence but one,

and that from everlasting. Hooker.

We know as little how the union is dissolved, that is, the chain of these differing subsistencies that compound us, as how it first commenced. Glanville.

Not only the things had subsistence, but the very images were of some creatures existing. Stillingfleet.

2. Competence; means of supporting life.
His viceroy could only propose to himself a comfortable subsistence out of the plunder of his province. Addison.

3. Inherence in something else.

SUBSISTENT. adj. [subsistens, Lat.]

1. Having real being.
Such as deny spirits subsistent without bodies, will with difficulty affirm the separate existence of their own. Brown.

2. Inherent.
These qualities are not subsistent in those bodies, but are operations of fancy begotten in something else. Bentley.

SUBSTANCE. n. s. [substance, Fr. sub-stantia, Latin.]

1. Being; something existing; something of which we can say that it is.

Since then the soul works by herself alone,
Springs not from sense, nor humours well agreeing;
Her nature is peculiar, and her own;
She is a substance, and a perfect being. Davies.

The strength of gods,
And this empyreal substance, cannot fail. Milton.

2. That which supports accidents.
What creatures there inhabit, of what mold
And substance? Milton.

Every being is considered as subsisting in and by itself, and then it is called a substance; or it subsists in and by another, and then it is called a mode or manner of being. Watts.

3. The essential part.
It will serve our turn to comprehend the substance, without confining ourselves to scrupulous exactness in form. Digby.

This edition is the same in substance with the Latin. Burnet.

They are the best epitomes, and let you see with one cast of the eye the substance of a hundred pages.
Addison.

4. Something real, not imaginary; something solid, not empty.

Shadows to-night
Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard,
Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers
Arm'd all in proof, and led by shallow Richmond.
Shakspeare.

He the future evil shall no less
In apprehension than in substance feel. Milton.
Heroick virtue did his actions guide,
And he the substance, not th' appearance, chose:
To rescue one such friend he took more pride,
Than to destroy whole thousands of such foes. Dryden.

God is no longer to be worshipped and believed in as a god foreshewing and assuring by types, but as a god who has performed the substance of what he promised. Nelson.

5. Body; corporeal nature.

Between the parts of opaque and coloured bodies are many spaces, either empty or replenished with mediums of other densities; as, water between the tinging corpuscles wherewith any liquor is impregnated, air between the aqueous globules that constitute clouds or mists, and for the most part spaces void of both air and water; but yet perhaps not wholly void of all substance between the parts of hard bodies. Newton.

The qualities of plants are more various than those of animal substances. Arbutnot.

There may be a great and constant cough, with an extraordinary discharge of flegmatick matter, while, notwithstanding, the substance of the lungs remains sound. Blackmore.

6. Wealth; means of life.

He hath eaten me out of house and home, and hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his;
but I will have some of it out again. Shakspeare.

We are destroying many thousand lives, and exhausting our substance, but not for our own interest.
Swift.

SUBSTA'NTIAL. adj. [substantiel, Fr. from substance.]

1. Real; actually existing.

If this atheist would have his chance to be a real and substantial agent, he is more stupid than the vulgar. Bentley.

2. True; solid; real; not merely seeming.

O blessed, blessed night! I am afraid,
Being in night, all this is but a dream;
Too flattering sweet to be substantial. Shakspeare.
To give thee being, I lent
Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart, Substantial life. Milton.

If happiness be a substantial good,
Not fram'd of accidents, nor subject to them,
I err'd to seek it in a blind revenge. Denham.

Time, as a river, hath brought down to us what is more light and superficial, while things more solid and substantial have been immersed. Glanville.

The difference betwixt the empty vanity of ostentation, and the substantial ornaments of virtue. L'Estrange.

Observations are the only sure grounds whereon to build a lasting and substantial philosophy. Woodw.

A solid and substantial greatness of soul, looks down with neglect on the censures and applauses of the multitude. Addison.

This useful, charitable, humble employment of yourselves, is what I recommend to you with greatest earnestness, as being a substantial part of a wife and pious life. Law.

3. Corporeal; material.

Now shine these planets with substantial rays?
Does innate lustre gild their measur'd days? Prior.

The sun appears flat like a plate of silver, the moon as big as the sun, and the rainbow a large substantial arch in the sky; all which are gross falsehoods. Watts.

4. Strong; stout; bulky.

Substantial doors,
Cross-barr'd and bolted fast, fear no assaults. Milton.

5. Responsible; moderately wealthy; possessed of substance.

Trials of crimes and titles of right shall be made by verdict of a jury, chosen out of the honest and most substantial freeholders. Spenser.

The merchants, and substantial citizens, cannot make up more than a hundred thousand families. Addison.

SUBSTANTIALITY. n. f. [from substantial.]

1. The state of real existence.

2. Corporeity; materiality.

Body cannot act on any thing but by motion; motion cannot be received but by quantity and matter; the soul is a stranger to such gross substantiality, and owns nothing of these. Glanville.

Successively from age to age? Shakspeare.

That king left only by his six wives three children, who reigned successively, and died childless. Bacon.

We that measure times by first and last,
The sight of things successively do take,
When God on all at once his view doth cast,
And of all times doth but one instant make. Davies.

I inclined the paper to the rays very obliquely, that the most refrangible rays might be more copiously reflected than the rest, and the whiteness at length changed successively into blue, indigo, and violet. Newton.

No such motion of the same atom can be all of it existent at once: it must needs be made gradually and successively, both as to place and time; seeing that body cannot at the same instant be in more places than one. Bentley.

We have a tradition coming down to us from our fathers; a kind of inheritance successively conveyed to us by the primitive saints from the apostles themselves. Waterland.

SUCCESSIONENESS, n. f. [from successive.]

The state of being successive.

All the notion we have of duration is partly by the successiveness of its own operations, and partly by those external measures that it finds in motion. Hale.

SUCCESSLESS, adj. [from success.] Unlucky; unfortunate; failing of the event desired.

A second colony is sent hither, but as successless
as the first. Haylin.

The hopes of thy successless love resign. Dryden.

The Bavarian duke,
Bold champion! brandishing his Noric blade,
Bait temper'd steel, successless prov'd in field. Philips.

Passion unpity'd, and successless love,
Plant daggers in my heart. Addison.

Successless all her soft caresses prove,
To banish from his breast his country's love. Pope.

SUCCESSOR, n. f. [successeur, Fr. successor, Lat.]

This is sometimes pronounced successour, with the accent in the middle.

One that follows in the place or character of another: correlative to predecessor.

This king by this queen had a son of tender age, but of great expectation, brought up in the hope of themselves, and a ready acceptance of the inconstant people, as successor of his father's crown. Sidney.

The successor of Moses in prophecies. Ecclesiasticus.

The fear of what was to come from an unacknowledged successor to the crown, clouded much of that prosperity then, which now shines in chronicle. Clarendon.

The second part of confirmation is the prayer and benediction of the bishop, the successor of the apostles in this office. Hammond.

The furly savage offspring disappear,
And curse the bright successor of the year;
Yet crafty kind with daylight can dispense. Dryden.

Whether a bright successor, or the same. Tate.

The descendants of Alexander's successors cultivated navigation in some lesser degree. Arbutnot.

SUCCINCT, adj. [succinct, Fr. succinctus, Lat.]

1. Tucked or girded up; having the clothes drawn up to disengage the legs.

His habit fit for speed succinct. Milton.

His vest succinct then girding round his waist,
Forth rush'd the swain. Pope.

Four knives in garbs succinct. Pope.

2. Short; concise; brief.

A strict and succinct style is that where you can take nothing away without loss, and that loss manifest. Ben Jonson.

Let all your precepts be succinct and clear,
That ready wits may comprehend them soon. Roscommon.

SUCCINCTLY, adv. [from succinct.]

Briefly; concisely; without superfluity of diction.

I shall present you very succinctly with a few reflections that most readily occur. Boyle.

I'll recant, when France can shew me wit
As strong as ours, and as succinctly writ. Roscommon.

SUCCINCTNESS, n. f. [from succinct.]

Brevity; conciseness.

SUCCORY, n. f. [cichorium, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

A garden-fallad.

Of endive, radishes, and succory. Dryden.

The medicaments to diminish the milk are lettuce, purslane, endive, and succory. Wiseman.

TO SUCCOUR, v. a. [séjourir, Fr. succurro, Lat.]

To help; to assist in difficulty or distress; to relieve.

As that famous queen
Of Amazons, whom Pyrrhus did destroy,
Did shew herself in great triumphant joy,
To succour the weak state of sad afflicted Troy. Spenser.

A grateful beast will stand upon record, against those that in their prosperity forget their friends, that to their loss and hazard stood by and succoured them in their adversity. L'Estrange.

SUCCOUR, n. f. [from the verb; séours, French.]

1. Aid; assistance; relief of any kind; help in distress.

My father,
Flying for succour to his servant Banister,
Being distress'd, was by that wretch betray'd. Shakspeare.

Here's a young maid with travel oppress'd,
And faints for succour. Shakspeare.

2. The person or thing that brings help.

Fear nothing else but a betraying of succours which reason offereth. Wisdom.

Our watchful general hath discern'd from far
The mighty succour which made glad the foe. Dryden.

SUCCOURER, n. f. [from succour.] Helper; assistant; reliever.

She hath been a succourer of many. Romans.

SUCCOURLESS, adj. [from succour.]

Wanting relief; void of friends or help.

Succourless and sad,

She with extended arms his aid implores. Thomson.

SUCCULENCE, n. f. [from succulent.]

SUCCULENCY, n. f. [from succulent.]

SUCCULENT, adj. [succulent, Fr. succulentus, Lat.] juicy; moist.

These plants have a strong, dense, and succulent
moisture, which is not apt to exhale. Bacon.

Divine Providence has spread her table every where, not with a juiceless green carpet, but with succulent herbage and nourishing grass, upon which most beasts feed. Morgan.

On our account has Jove,
Indulgent, to all lands some succulent plant Allotted, that poor helpless man might slack
His present thirst. Philips.

TO SUCCUMB, v. n. [succumbo, Latin; succomber, Fr.] To yield; to sink under any difficulty. Not in use, except among the Scotch.

To their wills we must succumb,
Quocunque trabunt, 'tis our doom. Hudibras.

SUCCUSSATION, n. f. [succussio, Latin.]

A trot.

They move two legs of one side together, which is totulation or ambling; or lift one foot before, and the cross foot behind, which is succussation or trotting. Brown.

They rode, but authors do not say Whether totulation or succussation. Butler.

SUCCUSSION, n. f. [succussio, Lat.]

1. The act of shaking.

2. [In physick.] Is such a shaking of the nervous parts as is procured by strong sti-muli, like sternutatories, friction, and the like, which are commonly used in apoplectick affections.

When any of that risible species were brought to the doctor, and when he considered the spasms of the diaphragm, and all the muscles of respiration, with the tremulous succussion of the whole human body, he gave such patients over. Mart Scriblerus.

SUCH, pronoun. [sulleiks, Gothick; sulk,
Dutch; ypile, Sax.]

1. Of that kind; of the like kind. With as before the thing to which it relates, when the thing follows: as, such a power as a king's; such a gift as a kingdom.

'Tis such another fitchew! marry, a perfume'd
one. Shakspeare.

Can we find such a one as this, in whom the spirit of God is? Genesis.

The works of the flesh are manifest; such are drunkenness, revelings, and such like. Galatians.

You will not make this a general rule to debar such from preaching of the gospel, as have through infirmity fallen. Whitgift.

Such another idol was Manah, worshipped between Mecca and Medina, which was called a rock or stone. Stillington.

Such precepts as tend to make men good, highly considered, may be distributed into such as enjoin piety towards God, or such as require the good government of ourselves. Tillotson.

If my song be such,
That you will hear and credit me too much,
Attentive listen. Dryden.

Such are the cold Riphean race, and such
The savage Scythian. Dryden.

As to be perfectly just is an attribute of the Divine Nature, to be so to the utmost of our abilities is the glory of a man: such an one, who has the public administration, acts like the representative of his Maker. Addison.

You love a verse, take such as I can send. Pope.

2. The same that: with as.

This was the state of the kingdom of Tunis at such time as Barbarossa, with Solymans great fleet, landed in Africk. Kneller.

3. Comprehended under the term premised, like what has been said.

That thou art happy, owe to God;
That thou continu'st such, owe to thyself. Milton.

To assert that God looked upon Adam's fall as a sin, and punished it as suck, when, without any antecedent sin, he withdrew that actual grace, upon which it was impossible for him not to fall, highly reproaches the essential equity of the Divine Nature.

No promise can oblige a prince so much,
Still to be good, as long to have been suck.

4. A manner of expressing a particular person or thing.

I saw him yesterday
With suck and suck.

If you repay me not on suck a day,
In suck a place, suck sum or fums as are Express'd in the condition, let the forfeit
Be an equal pound of your flesh.

I have appointed my servants to suck and suck place.

Scarce this word death from sorrow did proceed,
When in rush'd one, and tells him suck a knight
Is new arriv'd.

Himself overtook a party of the army, consisting of three thousand horse and foot, with a train of artillery, which he left at suck a place, within three hours march of Berwick.

That which doth constitute any thing in its being, and distinguish it from all other things, is called the form or essence of suck a thing.

The same sovereign authority may enact a law, commanding suck or suck an action to-day, and quite a contrary law forbidding the same to-morrow.

Those artists who propose only the imitation of suck or suck a particular person, without election of those ideas before-mentioned, have been reproached for that omission.

To SUCK. v. a. [sucan, Sax. sugo, suc- tum, Lat. succer, Fr.]

1. To draw by making a rarefaction of the air.

2. To draw in with the mouth.

The cup of astonishment thou shalt drink, and suck it out.

We'll hand in hand to the dark mansions go,
Where, sucking in each other's latest breath,
We may transfuse our souls.

Still she drew
The sweets from ev'ry flow'r, and suck'd the dew.

Transfix'd as o'er Castalia's streams he hung,
He suck'd new poisons with his triple tongue.

3. To draw the teat of a female.

Desire, the more he suck'd, more sought the breast,
Like dropsy folk still drink to be a-thirst.

A bitch will nurse young foxes in place of her puppies, if you can get them once to suck her so long, that her milk may go through them.

Did a child suck every day a new nurse, it would be no more affrighted with the change of faces at six months old than at sixty.

3. To draw with the milk.

Thy valiantness was mine, thou suck'dst it from me;

But own thy pride thyself.

5. To empty by sucking.

A fox lay with whole swarms of flies sucking and galling of him.

Bees on tops of lilies feed,
And creep within their bells to suck the balmy seed.

6. To draw or drain.

I can suck melancholy out of a song, as a weazel sucks eggs.

Pumping hath tir'd our men;
Seas into seas thrown, we suck in again.

A cubical vessel of brass is filled an inch and a half in half an hour; but because it sucks up nothing as the earth doth, take an inch for half an hour's rain.

All the under passions,
As waters are by whirlpools suck'd and drawn,
Were quite devour'd in the vast gulph of empire.

Old Ocean, suck'd through the porous globe,
Had long ere now forsook his horrid bed.

To SUCK. v. n.

1. To draw by rarefying the air.

Continual repairs, the least defects in sucking
pumps are constantly requiring.

2. To draw the breast.

Such as are nourished with milk find the paps, and suck at them; whereas none of those that are not designed for that nourishment ever offer to suck.

I would
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
To win thee, lady.
A nursing father beareth with the sucking child.

3. To draw; to imbibe.

The crown had sucked too hard, and now, being full, was like to draw less.

SUCK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of sucking.

I hoped, from the descent of the quicksilver in the tube, upon the first suck, that I should be able to give a nearer guess at the proportion of force betwixt the pressure of the air and the gravity of quicksilver.

2. Milk given by females.

They draw with their suck the disposition of nurses.

I have given suck, and know
How tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me.

Those first unpolish'd matrons
Gave suck to infants of gigantic mold.

It would be inconvenient for birds to give suck.

SUCKER. n. s. [suceur, Fr. from suck.]

1. Any thing that draws.

2. The embolus of a pump.

Oil must be poured into the cylinder, that the sucker may slip up and down in it more smoothly.

The ascent of waters is by suckers or forcers, or something equivalent thereunto.

3. A round piece of leather, laid wet on a stone, and drawn up in the middle, rarifies the air within, which pressing upon its edges, holds it down to the stone.

One of the round leathers wherewith boys play, called suckers, not above an inch and half diameter, being well soaked in water, will stick and pluck a stone of twelve pounds up from the ground.

4. A pipe through which any thing is sucked.

Mariners aye ply the pump,
So they, but cheerful, unfatigu'd, still move
The draining sucker.

5. A young twig shooting from the stock. This word was perhaps originally sucule.

The cutting away of suckers at the root and body doth make trees grow high.

Out of this old root a sucker may spring, that with a little shelter and good seasons may prove a mighty tree.

SUCKET. n. s. [from suck.] A sweetmeat, to be dissolved in the mouth.

Nature's confectioner, the bee,
Whose suckets are moist alchymy;
The still of his refining mold
Minting the garden into gold.

SUCKINGBOTTLE. n. s. [suck and bottle.]

A bottle which to children supplies the want of a pap.

He that will say, children join these general abstract speculations with their suckingbottles, has more zeal for his opinion, but less sincerity.

To SUCKLE. v. a. [from suck.] To nurse at the breast.

The breast of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier.

She nurses me up and suckles me.

Two thriving calves she suckles twice a-day.

The Roman soldiers bare on their helmets the first history of Romulus, who was begot by the god of war, and suckled by a wolf.

SUCKLING. n. s. [from suck.] A young creature yet fed by the pap.

I provide a suckling,
That ne'er had nourishment but from the teat.

Young animals participate of the nature of their tender aliment, as sucklings of milk.

SUCTION. n. s. [from suck; succion, Fr.] The act of sucking.

Sounds exterior and interior may be made by suction, as by emission of the breath.

Though the valve were not above an inch and a half in diameter, yet the weight kept up by suction, or supported by the air, and what was cast out of it, weighed ten pounds.

Cornelius regulated the suction of his child.

SUDATION. n. s. [sudo, Lat.] Sweat.

SUDATORY. n. s. [sudo, Lat.] Hothouse; sweating-bath.

SUDDEN. adj. [soudain, Fr. roden, Saxon.]

1. Happening without previous notice; coming without the common preparatives; coming unexpectedly.

We have not yet set down this day of triumph;
To-morrow, in my judgment, is too sudden.

There was never any thing so sudden, but Caesar's thrafonical brag of I came, saw, and overcame.

Herbs sudden flower'd,
Opening their various colours.

His death may be sudden to him, though it comes by never so slow degrees.

2. Hasty; violent; rash; passionate; precipitate. Not in use.

I grant him
Sudden, malicious, smacking of ev'ry sin.

SUDDEN. n. s.

1. Any unexpected occurrence; surprise. Not in use.

Parents should mark the witty excuses of their children at suddains and surprisals, rather than pamper them.

2. On or of a SUDDEN. Sooner than was expected; without the natural or commonly accustomed preparatives.

Following the flyers at the very heels,
With them he enters, who upon the sudden
Clapt to their gates.

How art thou lost, how on a sudden lost!

They keep their patients so warm as almost to stifle them, and all on a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue.

When you have a mind to leave your master, grow rude and faucy of a sudden, and beyond your usual behaviour.

SUDDENLY. adv. [from sudden.]

1. In an unexpected manner; without preparation; hastily.

You shall find three of your Argosies
Are richly come to harbour suddenly.

If elision of the air made the sound, the touch of the bell or string could not extinguish so suddenly that motion.

To the pale foes they suddenly draw near,
And summon them to unexpected fight.

She struck the warlike spear into the ground,
Which sprouting leaves did suddenly enclose,
And peaceful olives shaded as they rose.

2. Without premeditation.

If thou canst accuse,
Do it without invention suddenly.

SUDDENNESS. n. s. [from sudden.] State of being sudden; unexpected presence;

manner of coming or happening unexpectedly.

All in the open hall amazed stood,
At suddenness of that unwary sight,
And wond'ring at his breathless hasty mood.

He speedily run forward, counting his suddenness his most advantage, that he might overtake the English.

The rage of people is like that of the sea, which once breaking bounds, overflows a country with that suddenness and violence as leaves no hopes of flying.

SUDORIFICK. [sudorifique, Fr. sudor and facio, Lat.] Provoking or causing sweat.

Physicians may well provoke sweat in bed by bottles, with a decoction of sudorifick herbs in hot water.

Exhaling the most liquid parts of the blood by sudorifick or watery evaporations, brings it into a morbid state.

SUDORIFICK. n. s. A medicine provoking sweat.

As to sudorificks, consider that the liquid which goes off by sweat is often the most subtle part of the blood.

SUDOROUS. adj. [from sudor, Lat.] Consisting of sweat. Not used.

Beside the strigments and sudorous adhesions from men's hands, nothing proceedeth from gold in the usual decoction thereof.

SUDS. n. s. [from reoden, to seeth;
whence rodden, Sax.]

1. A lixivium of soap and water.
2. To be in the SUDS. A familiar phrase for being in any difficulty.

To SUE. v. a. [suiver, Fr.]

1. To prosecute by law.
If any sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also.
2. To gain by legal procedure.
3. [In falconry.] To clean the beak, as a hawk.

To SUE. v. n. To beg; to entreat; to petition.

Full little knowest thou that hast not try'd,
What hell it is in suing long to bide.

If me thou deign to serve and sue,
At thy command, lo! all these mountains be.

When maidens sue,
Men give like gods.

Ambassadors came unto him as far as the mouth of the Euphrates, suing unto him for peace.

For this, this only favour let me sue,
Refuse it not; but let my body have
The last retreat of human kind, a grave.

Despise not then, that in our hands bear we These holy boughs, and sue with words of pray'r.

'Twill never be too late,
To sue for chains, and own a conqueror.

The fair Egyptian
Courtied with freedom now the beauteous slave,
Now falt'ring sued, and threat'ning now did rave.

By adverse destiny constrain'd to sue
For counsel and redress, he sues to you.

To SUE. v. a. To obtain by entreaty: with out. The expression is perhaps improper.

Nor was our blessed Saviour only our propitiation to die for us, but he is still our advocate, continually interceding with his Father in the behalf of all true penitents, and suing out a pardon for them in the court of heaven.

SU'ET. n. s. [suet, an old French word, according to Skinner.] A hard fat, particularly that about the kidneys.

The steatoma being suet, yields not to escharoticks.

SU'ETY. adj. [from suet.] Consisting of suet; resembling suet.

If the matter forming a wen resembles fat or a suet substance, it is called steatoma.

To SUFFER. v. a. [suffero, Lat. souffrir,
French.]

1. To bear; to undergo; to feel with sense of pain.

A man of great wrath shall suffer punishment.

A woman suffered many things of physicians, and spent all she had.

Shall we then live thus vile, the race of heav'n
Thus trampled, thus expell'd to suffer here Chains and these torments? Better these than worse,

By my advice; since fate inevitable
Subdues us, and omnipotent decree,
The victor's will. To suffer as to do,
Our strength is equal, nor the law unjust

That so ordains.
Obedience impos'd,
On penalty of death, and suffering death.

2. To endure; to support; not to sink under.

Our spirit and strength entire Strongly to suffer and support our pains.

3. To allow; to permit; not to hinder.

He wonder'd that your lordship
Would suffer him to spend his youth at home.

Oft have I seen a hot o'erweening cur
Run back and bite, because he was withheld:
Who being suffered, with the bear's fell paw
Hath clapt his tail betwixt his legs and cry'd.

My duty cannot suffer
T' obey in all your daughter's hard commands.

Rebuke thy neighbour, and not suffer sin upon him.

I suffer them to enter and possess.
He that will suffer himself to be informed by observation, will find few signs of a soul accustomed to much thinking in a new-born child.

4. To pass through; to be affected by; to be acted upon.

The air now must suffer change.

To SUFFER. v. n.

1. To undergo pain or inconvenience.
My breast I arm, to overcome by suffering.

Prudence and good breeding are in all stations necessary; and most young men suffer in the want of them.

2. To undergo punishment.

The father was first condemn'd to suffer upon a day appointed, and the son afterwards the day following.

He thus
Was forc'd to suffer for himself and us!
Heir to his father's sorrows with his crown.

3. To be injured.

Publick business suffers by private infirmities, and kingdoms fall into weaknesses by the diseases or decays of those that manage them.

SUFFERABLE. adj. [from suffer.] Tolerable; such as may be endured.

Thy rages be
Now no more sufferable.

It is sufferable in any to use what liberty they list in their own writing, but the contracting and extending the lines and sense of others would appear a thankless office.

SUFFERABLY. adv. [from sufferable.]
Tolerably; so as to be endured.

An infant Titan held she in her arms;
Yet sufferably bright, the eye might bear
The ungrown glories of his beamy hair.

SUFFERANCE. n. s. [from suffer; souffrance, Fr.]

1. Pain; inconvenience; misery.
He must not only die,
But thy unkindness shall the death draw out
To ling'ring sufferance.

How much education may reconcile young people to pain and sufferance, the examples of Sparta shew.

2. Patience; moderation.

He thought t' have slain her in his fierce despatch;
But hasty heat tempering with sufferance wife,
He staid his hand.

He hath given excellent sufferance and vigorous-ness to the sufferers, arming them with strange courage.

Nor was his sufferance of other kinds less exemplary than that he evidenced in the reception of calumny.

And should I touch it nearly, bear it
With all the sufferance of a tender friend.

3. Toleration; permission; not hinder-ance.

In process of time, sometimes by sufferance, and sometimes by special leave and favour, they erected to themselves oratories not in any sumptuous or stately manner.

Most wretched man,
That to affections does the bridle lend;
In their beginning they are weak and wan,
But soon through sufferance grow to fearful end.

Some villains of my court
Are in consent and sufferance in this.

Both gloried to have 'scap'd the stygian flood,
As gods, and by their own recover'd strength;
Not by the sufferance of supernal pow'r.

SUFFERER. n. s. [from suffer.]

1. One who endures or undergoes pain or inconvenience.

This evil on the Philistines is fall'n,
The sufferers then will scarce molest us here:
From other hands we need not much to fear.

He, when his love was bounded in a few,
That were unhappy that they might be true,
Made you the fav'rite of his last sad times,

That is, a sufferer in his subjects crimes.
She returns to me with joy in her face, not from the sight of her husband, but from the good luck
she has had at cards; and if she has been a loser,
I am doubly a sufferer by it: she comes home out of humour, because she has been throwing away my estate.

The history of civil wars and rebellions does not make such deep and lasting impressions, as events of the same nature in which we or our friends have been sufferers.

Often these unhappy sufferers expire for want of sufficient vigour and spirit to carry on the animal regimen.

2. One who allows; one who permits.

SUFFERING. n. s. [from suffer.] Pain suffered.

Rejoice in my sufferings for you.
With what strength, what steadiness of mind,
He triumphs in the midst of all his sufferings!

We may hope the sufferings of innocent people, who have lived in that place which was the scene of rebellion, will secure from the like attempts.

It increased the smart of his present sufferings to compare them with his former happiness.

Then it is that the reasonableness of God's providence, in relation to the sufferings of good men in this world, will be fully justified.

To SUFFICE. v. n. [suffire, Fr. sufficio, Lat.] To be enough; to be sufficient;
to be equal to the end or purpose.

If thou ask me why, sufficeth, my reasons are good.

To recount almighty works,
What words or tongue of seraph can suffice,
Or heart of man suffice to comprehend?

The indolency we have, sufficing for our present happiness, we desire not to venture the change;
being content; and that is enough.

He lived in such temperance, as was enough to make the longest life agreeable; and in such a course of piety, as sufficed to make the most sudden death so also.

To SUFFICE. v. a.

1. To afford; to supply.

A strong and succulent moisture is able, without drawing help from the earth, to suffice the sprouting of the plant.

Thou king of horned floods, whose plenteous urn Suffices fatness to the fruitful corn,
Shall share my morning song and evening vows.

The pow'r appears'd, with winds suffice'd the sail;
The bellying canvas strutted with the gale.

2. To satisfy; to be equal to want or demand.

Israel, let it suffice you of all your abominations.

Parched corn she did eat, and was sufficed, and left.
Let it suffice thee that thou know'st us happy.

He our conqueror left us this our strength,
That we may so suffice his vengeful ire.

When the herd, suffice'd, did late repair
To ferny heaths, and to the forest late.

SUFFICIENCY. n. s. [suffisance, Fr. from sufficient.]

1. State of being adequate to the end proposed.

'Tis all men's office to speak patience
To those that wring under the load of sorrow;
But no man's virtue nor sufficiency

To be so moral, when he shall endure
The like himself.

His sufficiency is such, that he bestows and possesses, his plenty being unexhausted.

This he did with that readiness and sufficiency, as at once gave testimony to his ability, and to the evidence of the truth he asserted.

2. Qualification for any purpose.

I am not so confident of my own sufficiency, as not willingly to admit the counsel of others.

The bishop, perhaps an Irishman, being made judge, by that law, of the sufficiency of the ministers, may dislike the Englishman as unworthy.

Their pensioner De Wit was a minister of the greatest authority and sufficiency ever known in their state.

3. Competence; enough.

An elegant sufficiency, content.

4. Supply equal to want.

The most proper subjects of dispute are questions not of the very highest importance, nor of the meanest kind; but rather the intermediate questions between them: and there is a large sufficiency of them in the sciences.

5. It is used by Temple for that conceit which makes a man think himself equal to things above him; and is commonly compounded with self.

Sufficiency is a compound of vanity and ignorance.

SUFFICIENT. adj. [suffisant, Fr. sufficiens, Latin.]

1. Equal to any end or purpose; enough; competent; not deficient.

Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

Heaven yet retains Number sufficient to possess her realms.

Man is not sufficient of himself to his own happiness.

It is sufficient for me, if, by a discourse something out of the way, I shall have given occasion to others to cast about for new discoveries.

She would ruin me in silks, were not the quantity that goes to a large pincushion sufficient to make her a gown and petticoat.

Sufficient beneficence is what is competent to maintain a man and his family, and maintain hospitality; and likewise to pay and satisfy such dues belonging to the bishop.

Seven months are a sufficient time to correct vice in a Yahoo.

2. Qualified for any thing by fortune or otherwise.

In saying he is a good man, understand me, that he is sufficient.

SUFFICIENTLY. adv. [from sufficient.]

To a sufficient degree; enough.

If religion did possess sincerely and sufficiently the hearts of all men, there would need be no other restraint from evil.

Seem I to thee sufficiently possess'd
Of happiness?

All to whom they are proposed, are by his grace sufficiently moved to attend and assent to them; sufficiently, but not irresistibly; for if all were irresistibly moved, all would embrace them; and if none were sufficiently, none would embrace them.

In a few days, or hours, if I am to leave this carcass to be buried in the earth, and to find myself either for ever happy in the favour of God, or eternally separated from all light and peace; can any words sufficiently express the littleness of every thing else?

SUFFISANCE. n. s. [Fr.] Excess; plenty. Obsolete.

There him rests in riotous suffisance
Of all gladfulness and kingly joyance.

To SUFFOCATE. v. a. [suffoquer, Fr. suffoco, Lat.] To choak by exclusion or interception of air.

Let gallows gape for dog, let man go free,
And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate.

This chaos, when degree is suffocate,
Follows the choaking.

Air but momentarily remains in our bodies, only to refrigerate the heart; which being once performed, left, being self-heated again, it should suffocate that part, it hasteth back the same way it passed.

A swelling discontent is apt to suffocate and strangle without passage.

All involv'd in smoke, the latent foe
From every cranny suffocated falls.

SUFFOCATION. n. s. [suffocation, Fr. from suffocate.] The act of choaking; the state of being choaked.

Diseases of stoppings and suffocations are dangerous.

White consists in an equal mixture of all the primitive colours, and black in a suffocation of all the rays of light.

Mushrooms are best corrected by vinegar: some of them being poisonous, operate by suffocation, in which the best remedy is wine or vinegar and salt, and vomiting as soon as possible.

SUFFOCATIVE. adj. [from suffocate.] Having the power to choak.

From rain, after great frosts in the winter, glandulous tumours and suffocative catarrhs proceed.

SUFFRAGAN. n. s. [suffragant, Fr. suffraganeus, Lat.] A bishop considered as subject to his metropolitan.

The four archbishops of Mexico, Lima, S. Foy, and Dominico, have under them twenty-five suffragan bishops, all liberally endowed and provided for.

Suffragan bishops shall have more than one riding apparitor.

Becket, archbishop of Canterbury, insolently took upon him to declare five articles void, in his epistle to his suffragans.

To SUFFRAGATE. v. n. [suffragor, Lat.] To vote with; to agree in voice with.

No tradition could universally prevail, unless there were some common congruity of somewhat inherent in nature, which suits and suffragates with it, and closeth with it.

SUFFRAGE. n. s. [suffrage, Fr. suffragium, Lat.] Vote; voice given in a controverted point.

Noble confederates, thus far is perfect,
Only your suffrages I will expect
At the assembly for the chusing of consuls.

They would not abet by their suffrages of presence the designs of those innovations.

The fairest of our island dare not commit their cause to the suffrage of those who most partially adore them.

Fabius might joy in Scipio, when he saw
A beardless consul made against the law;
And join his suffrage to the votes of Rome.

This very variety of sea and land, hill and dale, is extremely agreeable, the ancients and moderns giving their suffrages unanimously herein.

Lactantius and St. Austin confirm by their suffrage the observation made by the heathen writers.

To the law and to the testimony let the appeal be in the first place; and next to the united suffrage of the primitive churches, as the best and safest comment upon the other.

SUFFRAGINOUS. adj. [suffrago, Latin.] Belonging to the knee joint of beasts.

In elephants, the bought of the forelegs is not directly backward, but laterally, and somewhat inward; but the hough, or suffraginous flexure behind, rather outward.

SUFFUMIGATION. n. s. [suffumigation, Fr. suffumigo, Lat.] Operation of fumes raised by fire.

If the matter be so gross as it yields not to remedies, it may be attempted by suffumigation.

SUFFUMIGE. n. s. [suffumigo, Lat.] A medical fume. Not used.

For external means, drying suffumiges or smoaks are prescribed with good success; they are usually composed out of frankincense, myrrh, and pitch.

To SUFFUSE. v. a. [suffusus, Latin.] To spread over with something expandible, as with a vapour or a tincture.

Suspensions, and fantastical surmise,
And jealousy suffus'd, with jaundice in her eyes.

To that recess,
When purple light shall next suffuse the skies,
With me repair.

Instead of love-enliven'd cheeks,
With flowing rapture bright, dark looks succeed,
Suffus'd and glaring with untender fire.

SUFFUSION. n. s. [suffusion, Fr. from suffuse.]

1. The act of overspreading with any thing.

2. That which is suffused or spread.

A drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,
Or dim suffusion veil'd.

The disk of Phœbus, when he climbs on high,
Appears at first but as a blood-hot eye;
And when his chariot downward draws to bed,
His ball is with the same suffusion red.

To those that have the jaundice, or like suffusion of eyes, objects appear of that colour.

SUG. n. s. [sugo, Lat. to suck.]

Many have sticking on them sug, or trout-lice, which is a kind of worm like a clove or pin, with a big head, and sticks close to him, and sucks his moisture.

SUGAR. n. s. [succe, Fr. saccharum, Latin]

1. The native salt of the sugar-cane, obtained by the expression and evaporation of its juice.

All the blood of Zelmane's body stirred in her,
as wine will do when sugar is hastily put into it.

Lumps of sugar lose themselves, and twine
Their subtle essence with the soul of wine.

A grocer in London gave for his rebus a sugar-loaf standing upon a flat steeple.

Saccharum candidum shoots into angular figures, by placing a great many sticks a-cross a vessel of liquid sugar.

If the child must have sugar-plums when he has a mind, rather than be out of humour; why, when he is grown up, must he not be satisfied too with wine? Locke.

In a sugar-baker's drying-room, where the air was heated fifty-four degrees beyond that of a human body, a sparrow died in two minutes. Arbutnot.

A piece of some geniculated plant, seeming to be part of a sugar-cane. Woodward.

2. Any thing proverbially sweet.

Your fair discourse has been as sugar,
Making the hard way sweet and delectable. Shakspeare.

3. A chymical dry crystallization.

Sugar of lead, though made of that insipid metal, and four salt of vinegar, has in it a sweetness surpassing that of common sugar. Boyle.

To SUGAR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To impregnate or season with sugar.

Short thick fobs

In panting murmurs still'd out of her breast,
That ever-bubbling spring, the sugar'd nest
Of her delicious soul, that there does lie,
Bathing in streams of liquid melody. Craslow.

2. To sweeten.

Thou would'st have plung'd thyself
In general riot, and never learn'd
The icy precepts of respect, but followed
The sugar'd game before thee. Shakspeare.
His glowing fire his errand daily said,
And sugar'd speeches whisper'd in mine ear. Fairfax.

Who casts out threats, no man deceives,
But flatt'ry still in sugar'd words betrays,
And poison in high-tasted meats conveys. Denham.

SUGARCANDY. n. f. [from sugar and candy.] Sugar candied, or crystallized.

SUGGARY. adj. [from sugar.] Sweet; tasting of sugar.

With the sugg'ry sweet thereof allure
Chaste ladies ears to phantasies impure. Spenser.

To SUGGEST. v. a. [suggero, suggestum, Lat. suggerer, Fr.]

1. To hint; to intimate; to insinuate good or ill; to tell privately.

Are you not asham'd?

What spirit suggests this imagination? Shakspeare.
I could never have suffered greater calamities, by denying to sign that justice my conscience suggested to me. King Charles.

These Romish casuists speak peace to the consciences of men, by suggesting something to them, which shall satisfy their minds, notwithstanding a known, actual, avowed continuance of their sins. South.

Some ideas make themselves way, and are suggested to the mind by all the ways of sensation and reflexion. Locke.

Reflect upon the different state of the mind in thinking, which those instances of attention, reverie and dreaming, naturally enough suggest. Locke.

Search for some thoughts thy own suggesting mind,

And others dictated by heav'nly pow'r Shall rise spontaneous. Pope.

2. To seduce; to draw to ill by insinuation. Out of use.

When devils will their blackest sins put on,
They do suggest at first with heav'nly shows. Shakspeare.

Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested,
I nightly lodge her in an upper tower. Shakspeare.

3. To inform secretly. Out of use.

We must suggest the people, in what hatred
He still hath held them, that to 's power he would Have made them mules. Shakspeare.

SUGGESTER. n. f. [from suggest.] One that reminds another.

SUGGESTION. n. f. [suggestion, Fr. from suggest.]

1. Private hint; intimation; insinuation; secret notification.

It allayeth all base and earthly cogitations, Banisheth and driveth away those evil secret sug- gestions which our invisible enemy is always apt to minister. Hooker.

He was a man

Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking
Himself with princes; one that by suggestion
Tied all the kingdom. Shakspeare.

Native and untaught suggestions of inquisitive children. Locke.

Another way is letting the mind, upon the suggestion of any new notion, run after similes. Locke.

2. Secret incitement.

Arthur, they say, is kill'd to-night

On your suggestion. Shakspeare.

To SUGGILATE. v. a. [suggillo, Lat.] To beat black and blue; to make livid by a bruise.

The head of the os humeri was bruised, and remained suggilated long after. Wiseman.

SUICIDE. n. f. [suicidium, Latin.]

1. Self-murder; the horrid crime of destroying one's self.

Child of despair, and suicide by name. Savage.
To be cut off by the sword of injured friendship is the most dreadful of all deaths, next to suicide. Clarissa.

2. A self-murderer.

If fate forbears us, fancy strikes the blow;
We make misfortunes, suicides in woe. Young.
SUILLAGE. n. f. [souillage, Fr.] Drain of filth. Obsolete.

When they have chosen the plot, and laid out the limits of the work, some Italians dig wells and cisterns, and other conveyances for the suillage of the house. Wotton.

SUING. n. f. [This word seems to come from suer, to sweat, French; it is perhaps peculiar to Bacon.] The act of soaking through any thing.

Note the percolation or suing of the verjuice through the wood; for verjuice of itself would never have passed through the wood. Bacon.

SUIT. n. f. [suite, French.]

1. A set; a number of things correspondent one to the other.

Whose verses they deduc'd from those first golden times,

Of sundry sorts of feet, and sundry suits of rhimes. Drayton.

We, ere the day, two suits of armour sought,
Which borne before him on his steed he brought. Dryden.

2. Clothes made one part to answer another.

What a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp, will do among foaming bottles, and ale-wash'd wits, is wonderful. Shakspeare.

Him all repute
For his device in handfoming a suit,
To judge of lace, pink, panes, print, cut and plait,
Of all the court to have the best conceit. Donne.

Three or four suits one winter there does waste,
One suit does there three or four winters last. Cowley.

His majesty was supplied with three thousand suits of cloaths, with good proportions of shoes and stockings. Clarendon.

3. Consecution; series; regular order.

Every five and thirty years the same kind and suite of weather comes about again; as great frost, great wet, great droughts, warm winters, summers with little heat; and they call it the prime. Bacon.

4. Out of SUITS. Having no correspondence. A metaphor, I suppose, from cards.

Wear this for me; one out of suits with fortune,
That would give more, but that her hand lacks means. Shakspeare.

5. [suite, Fr.] Retinue; company. Obsolete.

Plexirtus's ill-led life, and worse-gotten honour, should have tumbled together to destruction, had there not come in Tydeus and Telenor, with fifty in their suite to his defence. Sidney.

6. [from To sue.] A petition; an address of entreaty.

Mine ears against your suits are stronger than Your gates against my force. Shakspeare.

She gallops o'er a courtier's nose;

And then dreams he of smelling out a suit. Shakspeare.
Had I a suit to Mr. Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakspeare.

Many shall make suit unto thee. Job.

My mind, neither with pride's itch, not yet hath been

Poison'd with love to see or to be seen:

I had no suit there, nor new suit to shew;
Yet went to court. Donne.

It will be as unreasonable to expect that God should attend and grant those suits of ours, which we do not at all consider ourselves. Duty of Man.

7. Courtship.

He that hath the steerage of my course,
Direct my suit. Shakspeare.

Their determinations are, to return to their home and to trouble you with no more suit, unless you may be won by some other sort than your father's imposition. Shakspeare.

8. In Spenser it seems to signify pursuit; prosecution.

High amongst all knights hast hung thy shield,
Thenceforth the suit of earthly conquest shooe,
And wash thy hands from guilt of bloody field. Spenser.

9. [In law.] Suit is sometimes put for the instance of a cause, and sometimes for the cause itself deduced in judgment.

All that had any suits in law came unto them. Ayliffe.

Susanna.

Wars are suits of appeal to the tribunal of God's justice, where there are no superiors on earth to determine the cause. Bacon.

Involve not thyself in the suits and parties of great personages. Taylor.

To Alibech alone refer your suit,
And let his sentence finish your dispute. Dryden.

A suit of law is not a thing unlawful in itself, but may be innocent, if nothing else comes in to make a sin thereof; but then it is our sin, and a matter of our account, when it is either upon an unjustifiable ground, or carried on by sinful management. Kettlewell.

John Bull was flattered by the lawyers that his suit would not last above a year, and that before that time he would be in quiet possession of his business. Arbutnot.

SUIT Covenant. [In law.] Is where the ancestor of one man covenanted with the ancestor of another to sue at his court. Bailey.

SUIT Court. [In law.] Is the court in which tenants owe attendance to their lord. Bailey.

SUIT Service. [In law.] Attendance which tenants owe to the court of their lord. Bailey.

To SUIT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fit; to adapt to something else.

Suit the action to the word, the word to the action, with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature. Shakspeare.

The matter and manner of their tales, and of their telling, are so suit'd to their different educations and humours, that each would be improper in any other. Dryden.

2. To be fitted to; to become.

Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal,
Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well. Dryden.
Her purple habit fits with such a grace
On her smooth shoulders, and so suits her face. Dryden.

If different sects should give us a list of those innate practical principles, they would set down only such as suit'd their distinct hypotheses. Locke.

Raise her notes to that sublime degree,
Which suits a song of piety and thee. Prior.

3. To dress; to clothe.

Such a Sebastian was my brother too,
So went he suit'd to his watry tomb;

If spirits can assume both form and suit,
You come to fright us. Shakspeare.

Be better suited;

These weeds are memories of those misfortunes:
I pr'ythee put them off to worser hours. Shakspeare.

I'll disrobe me

Of these Italian weeds, and suit myself
As does a Briton peasant. Shakspeare.

To SUIT. v. n. To agree; to accord.

Dryden uses it both with to and with.

The one intense, the other still remiss,
Cannot well suit with either; but soon prove Tedious alike. Milton.

The place itself was suiting to his care,
Uncouth and savage as the cruel fair. Dryden.

Pity does with a noble nature suit. Dryden.

Constraint does ill with love and beauty suit. Dryden.

This he says, because it suits with his hypothesis, but proves it not. Locke.

Give me not an office

That suits with me so ill; thou know'st my temper. Addison.

SUITABLE. adj. [from suit.] Fitting;
according with; agreeable to: with to.

Through all those miseries, in both there appeared a kind of nobleness not suitable to that affliction. Sidney.

What he did purpose, it was the pleasure of God that Solomon his son should perform, in manner suitable to their present and ancient state. Hooker.

To solemn acts of royalty and justice, their suit- able ornaments are a beauty; are they only in religion a stain? Hooker.

It is very suitable to the principles of the Roman church; for why should not their science as well as service be in an unknown tongue? Tillotson.

As the blessings of God upon his honest industry had been great, so he was not without intentions of making suitable returns in acts of charity. Atterbury.

Expression is the dress of thought, and still Appears more decent, as more suitable;
A vile conceit in pompous words express'd,
Is like a clown in regal purple dress'd. Pope.

It is as great an absurdity to suppose holy prayers and divine petitions without an holiness of life suit- able to them, as to suppose an holy and divine life without prayers. Larv.

SUITABLENESS. n. f. [from suitable.]
Fitness; agreeableness.

In words and styles, suitableness makes them acceptable and effective. Glanville.

With ordinary minds; it is the suitableness, not the evidence of a truth that makes it to be yielded to; and it is seldom that any thing practically convinces a man that does not please him first. South.

He creates those sympathies and suitablenesses of nature that are the foundation of all true friendship, and by his providence brings persons so affected together. South.

Consider the laws themselves, and their suitable- ness or unsuitableness to those to whom they are given. Tillotson.

SUITABLY. adv. [from suitable.] Agreeably; according to.

Whoever speaks upon an occasion may take any text suitably thereto; and ought to speak suitably to that text. South.

Some rank deity, whose filthy face
We suitably o'er stinking stables place. Dryden.

SUITER. } n. f. [from suit.]
SUITOR. }

1. One that sues; a petitioner; a suppli-cant.

As humility is in suiters a decent virtue, so the testification thereof, by such effectual acknowledgments, not only argueth a sound apprehension of his supereminent glory and majesty before whom we stand, but putteth also into his hands a kind of pledge or bond for security against our unthankfulness. Hooker.

She hath been a suitor to me for her brother,
Cut off by course of justice. Shakspeare.

My piteous soul began the wretchedness
Of suitors at court to mourn. Donne.

Not only bind thine own hands, but bind the hand of suiters also from offering. Bacon.

Yet their port

Not of mean suitors; nor important less Seem'd their petition, than when the ancient pair, Deucalion and chaite Pyrrha, to restore
The race of mankind drown'd, before the shrine
Of Themis stood devout. Milton.

I challenge nothing;

But I am an humble suitor for these prisoners. Denham.

My lord, I come an humble suitor to you. Rowe.
2. A wooer; one who courts a mistress.

I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart; for truly I love none.

—A dear happiness to women! they would else have been troubled with a pernicious suitor. Shakspeare.

He pass'd a year under the counsels of his mother, and then became a suitor to sir Roger Ashton's daughter. Wotton.

By many suitors sought, she mocks their pains,
And still her vow'd virginity maintains. Dryden.

He drew his seat, familiar, to her side,
Far from the sutor train, a brutal crowd. Pope.

SUITRESS. n. f. [from suitor.] A female supplicant.

'Twere pity

That could refuse a boon to such a suitress;
Y' have got a noble friend to be your advocate. Rowe.

SULCATED. adj. [sulcus, Lat.] Furrowed.

All are much chopped and sulcated by having lain exposed on the top of the clay to the weather, and to the erosion of the vitriolick matter mixed amongst the clay. Woodward.

SULL. n. f. A plough. Ainsworth.

SULLEN. adj. [Of this word the etymology is obscure.]

1. Gloomily angry; sluggishly discontented.

Wilmot continued still sullen and perverse, and every-day grew more insolent. Clarendon.

A man in a jail is sullen and out of humour at his first coming in. L'Estrange.

Forc'd by my pride, I my concern suppress'd;
Pretended drowsiness, and wish of rest;

And sullen I forsook th' imperfect feast. Prior.

If we sit down sullen and inactive, in expectation that God should do all, we shall find ourselves miserably deceived. Rogers.

2. Mischievous; malignant.

Such sullen planets at my birth did shine,
They threaten every fortune mixt with mine. Dryden.

The sullen fiend her sounding wings display'd,
Unwilling left the night, and fought the nether shade. Dryden.

3. Intractable; obstinate.

Things are as sullen as we are, and will be what they are, whatever we think of them. Tillotson.

4. Gloomy; dark; cloudy; dismal.

Why are thine eyes fixt to the sullen earth,
Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight? Shakspeare.

Night with her sullen wings to double shade,
The desert fowls in their clay nests were couch'd,
And now wild beasts came forth the woods to roam. Milton.

A glimpse of moon-shine, streak'd with red;
A shuffled, sullen, and uncertain light,
That dances through the clouds, and shuts again. Dryden.

No cheerful breeze this sullen region knows;
The dreaded east is all the wind that blows. Pope.

5. Heavy; dull; sorrowful.

Be thou the trumpet of our wrath,
And sullen presage of your own decay. Shakspeare.

SULLENLY. adv. [from sullen.] Gloomily; malignantly; intractably.

To say they are framed without the assistance of some principle that has wisdom in it, and come to pass from chance, is sullenly to assert a thing because we will assert it. More.

He in chains demanded more Than he impos'd in victory before:
He sullenly reply'd, he could not make These offers now. Dryden.

The gen'ral mends his weary pace,
And sullenly to his revenge he sails;

So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volume trails. Dryden.

SULLENNESS. n. f. [from sullen.] Gloomi-ness; moroseness; sluggish anger; malignity; intractability.

Speech being as rare as precious, her silence without sullenness, her modesty without affectation, and her shamefacedness without ignorance. Sidney.

To fit my sullenness,

He to another key his style doth dress. Donne.

In those vernal seasons, when the air is calm and pleasant, it were an injury and sullenness against nature, not to go out and see her riches. Milton.

Quit not the world out of any hypocrisy, sullen- ness, or superstition, but out of a sincere love of true knowledge and virtue. More.

With these comforts about me, and sullenness enough to use no remedy, Zalichem came to see me. Temple.

SULLENS. n. f. [without singular.] Morose temper; gloominess of mind. A burlesque word.

Let them die that age and sullens have. Shakspeare.

SULLIAGE. n. f. [souillage, Fr.] Pollution; filth; stain of dirt; foulness.
Not in use.

Require it to make some restitution to his neighbour for what it has detracted from it, by wiping off that sulliage it has cast upon his fame. Government of the Tongue.

Calumniate stoutly; for though we wipe away with never so much care the dirt thrown at us, there will be left some sulliage behind. Decay of Piety.

To SULLY. v. a. [souiller, Fr.] To soil;
to tarnish; to dirt; to spot.

Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding. Bacon.

The falling temples which the gods provoke,
And statues sully'd yet with sacrilegious smoke. Roscommon.

He's dead, whose love had sully'd all your reign;
And made you empress of the world in vain. Dryden.

Lab'ring years shall weep their destin'd race,
Charg'd with ill omens, sully'd with disgrace. Prior.

Publick justice may be done to those virtues their humility took care to conceal, which were sullied
by the calumnies and slanders of malicious men. Nelson.

Let there be no spots to sully the brightness of this solemnity.

Ye walkers too, that youthful colours wear,
Three sullying trades avoid with equal care;
The little chimney-sweeper skulks along,
And marks with sooty stains the heedless throng. Gay.

SULLY. n. f. [from the verb.] Soil; tarnish; spot.

You laying these light sullies on my son,
As 'twere a thing a little soil'd i' th' working. Shakspeare.

A noble and triumphant merit breaks through little spots and sullies in his reputation. Spectator.

SULPHUR. n. f. [Lat.] Brimstone.

In his womb was hid metallick ore,
The work of sulphur. Milton.

Sulphur is produced by incorporating an oily or bituminous matter with the fossil-salt. Woodward.

SULPHUREOUS. } adj. [sulphureus,
SULPHUROUS. } Latin.] Made

2. Relating to things above; placed above; celestial; heavenly.

That supernal Judge that stirs good thoughts
In any breast of strong authority,
To look into the blots and stains of right. Shaksp.
He with frequent intercourse
Thither will send his winged messengers,
On errands of supernal grace. Milton.
Both glorying to have 'scap'd the Stygian flood,
As gods, and by their own recover'd strength,
Not by the suff'rance of supernal pow'r. Milton.

Whilst the substance continued fluid, I could shake it with the supernatant menstruum, without making between them any true union. Boyle.

SUPERNATA'TION. n. f. [from supernato, Lat.] The act of swimming on the top of any thing.

Touching the supernatation of bodies, take of aquafortis two ounces, of quicksilver two drams, the dissolution will not bear a flint as big as a nutmeg. Bacon.

Bodies are differenced by supernatation, as floating on water; for chrysal will sink in water, as carrying in its own bulk a greater ponderosity than the space of any water it doth occupy; and will therefore only swim in molten metal and quicksilver.
Brown.

SUPERNATURAL. adj. [super and natural.] Being above the powers of nature.

There resteth either no way unto salvation, or, if any, then surely a way which is supernatural, a way which could never have entered into the heart of a man, as much as once to conceive or imagine, if God himself had not revealed it extraordinarily;
for which cause we term it the mystery or secret way of salvation. Hooker.

When supernatural duties are necessarily exacted, natural are not rejected as needless. Hooker.

The understanding is secured by the perfection of its own nature, or by supernatural assistance.

No man can give any rational account how it is possible that such a general flood should come, by any natural means. And if it be supernatural, that grants the thing I am proving, namely, such a supreme being as can alter the course of nature.
Wilkins.

What mists of providence are these,
Through which we cannot see?

So saints by supernatural power set free
Are left at last in martyrdom to die. Dryden.

SUPERNATURALLY. adv. [from supernatural.] In a manner above the course or power of nature.

The Son of God came to do every thing in mira-therefore in its present workings not controulable by reason, for as much as the proper effect of it is, for the time, to supersede the workings of reason.

South.

In this genuine acceptation of chance, nothing is supposed that can supersede the known laws of natural motion. Beniley.

SUPERSEDEAS. n. f. [In law.]

A writ which lieth in divers and sundry cases; in all which it signifies a command or request to stay or forbear the doing of that which in appearance of law were to be done, were it not for the cause whereupon the writ is granted: for example, a man regularly is to have surety of peace against him of whom he will swear that he is afraid; and the justice required hereunto cannot deny him: yet if the party be formerly bound to the peace, in chan-

To SUPPRESS. v. a. [supprimo, suppresus, Lat. supprimer, Fr.]

1. To crush; to overpower; to overwhelm; to subdue; to reduce from any state of activity or commotion.

Gloster would have armour out of the Tower, To crown himself king, and suppress the prince. Shakespeare.

Every rebellion, when it is suppressed, doth make the subject weaker, and the prince stronger. Davies.

Sir William Herbert, with a well armed and ordered company, set sharply upon them; and, oppressing some of the forwardest of them by death, suppressed the residue by fear. Hayward.

2. To conceal; not to tell; not to reveal.

Things not reveal'd, which th' invisible King, Only omniscient, hath suppressed in night. Milton.

Still she suppresses the name, and this keeps him in a pleasing suspense; and, in the very close of her speech, she indirectly mentions it. Broome.

3. To keep in; not to let out.

Well did'st thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice; For, had the passions of thy heart burst out, I fear we should have seen decypher'd there More ranc'rous spight, more furious raging broils. Shakespeare.

SUPPRESSION. n. s. [suppression, Fr. suppressio, Lat. from suppres.]

1. The act of suppressing.

2. Not publication.

You may depend upon a suppression of these verses. Pope.

This disease is generally fatal: if it suppurates the pus, it is evacuated into the lower belly, where it produceth putrefaction. Arbutnot.

To SUPPURATE. v. n. To grow to pus. SUPPURATION. n. s. [suppuration, Fr. from suppurate.]

1. The ripening or change of the matter of a tumour into pus.

If the inflammation be gone too far towards a suppuration, then it must be promoted with suppuratives, and opened by incision. Wifeman.

This great attrition must produce a great propensity to the putrescent alkaline condition of the fluids, and consequently to suppurations. Arbutnot.

2. The matter suppurated.

The great physician of souls sometimes cannot cure without cutting us: sin has festered inwardly, and he must lance the imposthume, to let out death with the suppuration. South.

SUPPURATIVE. adj. [suppuratif, Fr. from suppurative.] Digestive; generating matter.SUPPUTATION. n. s. [supputatio, Fr. supputo, Lat.] Reckoning; account; calculation; computation.

From these differing properties of day and year arise difficulties in carrying on and reconciling the supputation of time in long measures. Holder.

The Jews saw every day their Messiah still farther removed from them; that the promises of their doctors, about his speedy manifestations, were false; that the predictions of the prophets, whom they could now no longer understand, were covered with obscurity; that all the supputations of time either terminated in Jesus Christ, or were without a period. Wif.

To SUPPUTE. v. a. [from supputo, Lat.]

To reckon; to calculate.

SUPRA. [Lat.] In composition, signifies above or before.

SUPRALAPSARIAN. } adj. [supra and lapsus, Lat.] Antecedent to the fall of man.

The supralapsarians, with whom the object of the decree is bono conditus, man created not yet fallen; and the sublapsarians, with whom it is man fallen, or the corrupt mass. Hammond.

SUPRAVULGAR. adj. [supra and vulgar.] Above the vulgar.

But one of these motives can prevail with a man to furnish himself with supravulgar and noble qualities. Collier.

SUPREMACY. n. s. [from supreme.] Highest place; highest authority; state of being supreme.

No appeal may be made unto any one of higher power, in as much as the order of your discipline admitteth no standing inequality of courts, no spiritual judge to have any ordinary superior on earth, but as many supremacies as there are parishes and several congregations. Hooker.

As we under heav'n are supreme head, So, under him, that great supremacy, Where we do reign, we will alone uphold. Shakespeare.

I am asham'd that women
Should seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.
Shakspeare.

Put to proof his high supremacy,
Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or fate.
Milton.

Henry VIII. had no intention to change religion :
he continued to burn protestants after he had cast off the pope's supremacy. Swift.

You're form'd by nature for this supremacy, which is granted from the distinguishing character of your writing. Dryden.

From some wild curs that from their masters ran,
Abhorring the supremacy of man,
In woods and caves the rebel race began.
Dryden.

Supremacy of nature, or supremacy of perfection, is to be possessor of all perfection, and the highest excellency possible. Waterland.

To deny him this supremacy is to dethrone the Deity, and give his kingdom to another. Rogers.

SUPREME. adj. [supremus, Lat.]

1. Highest in dignity; highest in authority. It may be observed that superiour is used often of local elevation, but supreme only of intellectual or political.

As no man serveth God, and loveth him not; so neither can any man sincerely love God, and not extremely abhor that sin which is the highest degree of treason against the supreme Guide and Monarch of the whole world, with whose divine authority and power it investeth others. Hooker.

The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness! Shakspeare.

My soul akes
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of both. Shakspeare.

This strength, the seat of Deity supreme.
Milton.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees;
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state, and in three more decays.
Dryden.

2. Highest; most excellent.

No single virtue we can most commend,
Whether the wife, the mother, or the friend;
For she was all in that supreme degree,
That, as no one prevail'd, so all was she. Dryden.

To him both heav'n
The right had giv'n,
And his own love bequeath'd supreme command.
Dryden.

SUPREME. adv. [from the adjective.]
In the highest degree.

The starving chemist in his golden views
Supremely blest, the poet in his muse. Pope.

SUR. [sur, Fr.] In composition, means upon, or over and above.

the calf of the leg.

He was wounded in the inside of the calf of his leg, into the sural artery. Wifeman.

SURANCE. n. f. [from sure.] Warrant;
security; assurance.

Give some surance that thou art revenge;
Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot wheels.
Shakspeare.

TO SURBATE. v. a. [solbatir, Fr.] To bruise and batter the feet with travel; to harass; to fatigue.

Their march they continued all that night, the horsemen often alighting, that the foot might ride, and others taking many of them behind them :
however they could not but be extremely weary and surbated. Clarendon.

Chalky land surbates and spoils oxen's feet.
Mortimer.

SURBE'T. The participle passive of sur- beat, which Spenser seems to have used for surbate.

A bear and tyger being met
In cruel fight, on Lybick ocean wile, Espy a traveller with feet surbet,
Whom they in equal prey with to divide.
Spenser.

TO SURCEASE. v. n. [sur and cesser, Fr.
cesso, Lat.]

1. To be at an end; to stop; to cease; to be no longer in use or being.

Small favours will my prayers increase;
Granting my suit, you give me all;
And then my prayers must needs surcease;
For I have made your godhead fall. Donne.

2. To leave off; to practise no longer; to refrain finally.

To fly altogether from God, to despair, that creatures unworthy shall be able to obtain any thing at his hands, and under that pretence to surcease from prayers, as bootless or fruitless offices, were to him no less injurious than pernicious to our own souls. Hooker.

Nor did the British squadrons now surcease
To gall their foes o'erwhelm'd. Philips.

So pray'd he, whilst an angel's voice from high Bade him surcease to importune the sky. Harte.

TO SURCEASE. v. a. To stop; to put an end to. Obsolete.

All pain hath end, and every war hath peace;
But mine no price, nor prayer, may surcease.
Spenser.

SURCEASE. n. f. Cessation; stop.

It might very well agree with your principles, if your discipline were fully planted, even to send out your writs of surcease unto all courts of England for the most things handled in them. Hooker.

TO SURCHARGE. v. a. [surcharger, Fr.]

To overload; to overburden.

They put upon every portion of land a reasonable rent, which they called Romefcot, the which might not surcharge the tenant or freeholder. Spenser.

Tamas was returned to Tauris, in hope to have suddenly surpris'd his enemy, surcharged with the pleasures of so rich a city. Knolles.

More remov'd,
Left heav'n, surcharg'd with potent multitude,
Might hap to move new broils. Milton.

He ceas'd, discerning Adam with such joy
Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears
Without the vent of words. Milton.

When graceful sorrow in her pomp appears,
Sure she is dress'd in Melefinda's tears:
Your head reclin'd, as hiding grief from view,
Droops like a rose surcharg'd with morning dew.
Dryden.

SURCHARGE. n. f. [surcharge, Fr. from the verb.] Burden added to burden; overburden; more than can be well born.

The air, after receiving a charge, doth not receive a surcharge, or greater charge, with like appetite as it doth the first. Bacon.

An object of surcharge or excess destroyeth the sense; as the light of the sun, the eye; a violent sound near the ear, the hearing. Bacon.

The moralists make this raging of a lion to be a surcharge of one madness upon another.
L'Estrange.

SURCHARGER. n. f. [from surcharge.]
One that overburdens.

SURCINGLE. n. f. [sur and cingulum,
Latin.]

1. A girth with which the burden is bound upon a horse.

2. The girdle of a cassock.

which the tree cannot assimilate, and therefore sprouteth not forth in boughs and surcles of the same shape unto the tree. Brown.

The basilica dividing into two branches below the cubit, the outward sendeth two surcles unto the thumb. Brown.

SURCOAT. n. f. [surcot, old Fr. sur and coat.] A short coat worn over the rest of the dress.

The honourable habiliments, as robes of state, parliament-robes, the surcoat and mantle.
Camden.

The commons were besotted in excess of apparel, in wide surcoats reaching to their loins.
Camden.

That day in equal arms they fought for fame;
Their swords, their shields, their surcoats were the same. Dryden.

SURD. adj. [surdus, Lat.]

1. Deaf; wanting the sense of hearing.

2. Unheard; not perceived by the ear.

3. Not expressed by any term.

SURDITY. n. f. [from surd.] Deafness.

SURDNUMBER. n. f. [from surd and number.] That is incommensurate with unity.

SURE. adj. [seure, Fr.]

1. Certain; unfailing; infallible.

The testimony of the Lord is sure, and giveth wisdom unto the simple. Psalms.

Who knows,
Let this be good, whether our angry foe
Can give it, or will ever? How he can Is doubtful; that he never will, is sure. Milton.

2. Certainly doomed.

Our coin beyond sea is valued according to the silver in it: sending it in bullion is the safest way, and the weightiest is sure to go. Locke.

3. Confident; undoubting; certainly knowing.

Friar Laurence met them both;
Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she:
But, being mask'd, he was not sure of it.
Shakspeare.

Let no man seek what may befall;
Evil he may be sure. Milton.

The youngest in the morning are not sure
That 'till the night their life they can secure.
Denham.

While fore of battle, while our wounds are green,
Why would we tempt the doubtful dye agen?
In wars renew'd, uncertain of success,
Sure of a share, as umpires of the peace. Dryden.

If you find nothing new in the matter, I am sure much less will you in the style. Wake.

Be silent always, when you doubt your sense;
And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence.
Pope.

4. Safe; firm; certain; past doubt or danger. To make sure is to secure, so as that nothing shall put it out of one's possession or power.

Thy kingdom shall be sure unto thee, after that thou shalt have known that the heavens do rule.
Daniel.

He bad me make sure of the bear, before I sell his skin. L'Estrange.

They would make others on both sides sure of pleasing, in preference to instruction. Dryden.

They have a nearer and surer way to the felicity of life, by tempering their passions, and reducing their appetites. Temple.

A peace cannot fail, provided we make sure of Spain. Temple.

Revenge is now my joy; he's not for me,
And I'll make sure he ne'er shall be for thee.
Dryden.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
All to make sure the vengeance of this day,
Which even this day has ruin'd. Dryden.

Make Cato sure, and give up Utica,
Cæsar will ne'er refuse thee such a trifle. Addison.

They have reason to make all actions worthy of observation, which are sure to be observed.
Atterbury.

5. Firm; stable; steady; not liable to failure.

SUR

Thou the garland wear'st successively;
Yet though thou stand'st more sure than I could do,
Thou art not firm enough. Shakspeare.
I wish your horses swift and sure of foot,
And so I do commend you to their backs. Shakspeare.

I wrapt in sure bands both their hands and feet,
And cast them under hatches. Chapman.
Virtue, dear friend, needs no defence;
The surest guard is innocence. Roscommon.
Partition firm and sure the waters to divide. Milton.

Doubting thus of innate principles, men will call pulling up the old foundations of knowledge and certainty: I persuade myself that the way I have pursued, being conformable to truth, lays those foundations surer. Locke.

To prove a genuine birth,
On female truth assenting faith relies:
Thus manifest of right, I build my claim,
Sure founded, on a fair maternal fame. Pope.

6. To be SURE. Certainly. This is a vitious expression: more properly be sure.
Objects of sense would then determine the views of all such, to be sure, who conversed perpetually with them. Atterbury.

Though the chymist could not calcine the caput mortuum, to obtain its fixed salt, to be sure it must have some. Arbutnot.

SURE. adv. [surement, Fr.] Certainly; without doubt; doubtless. It is generally without emphasis; and, notwithstanding its original meaning, expresses rather doubt than assertion.

Something, sure, of state
Hath puddled his clear spirit. Shakspeare.
Her looks were flush'd, and fullen was her mien,
That sure the virgin goddess, had she been Aught but a virgin, must the guilt have seen. Addison.

Sure the queen would wish him still unknown:
She loaths, detests him, flies his hated presence. Smith.

Sure upon the whole, a bad author deserves better usage than a bad critick. Pope.

SUREFOOTED. adj. [sure and foot.]
Treading firmly; not stumbling.
True earnest sorrows, rooted miseries,
Anguish in grain, vexations ripe and blown,
Surefooted griefs, solid calamities. Herbert.

SURELY. adv. [from sure.]

1. Certainly; undoubtedly; without doubt.
It is often used rather to intend and strengthen the meaning of the sentence, than with any distinct and explicable meaning.

In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die. Genesis.
Thou surely hadst not come sole fugitive. Milton.

He that created something out of nothing, surely can raise great things out of small. South.

The curious have thought the most minute affairs of Rome worth notice; and surely the consideration of their wealth is at least of as great importance as grammatical criticisms. Arbutnot.

Surely we may presume, without affecting to sit in the seat of God, to think some very fallible men liable to errors. Waterland.

2. Firmly; without hazard.

He that walketh righteously, walketh surely.
Proverbs.

SURENESS. n. f. [from sure.] Certainty.
The subtle ague, that for sureness sake
Takes its own time th' assault to make. Cowley.
He diverted himself with the speculation of the seed of coral: and for more sureness he repeats it. Woodward.

SURETISHIP. n. f. [from surety.] The office of a surety or bondsman; the act of being bound for another.

Idly, like prisoners which whole months will swear

That only suretiship hath brought them there. Donne.

SUR

If here not clear'd no suretiship can bail
Condemned debtors from th' eternal gaol. Denham.

Hath not the greatest slaughter of armies been effected by stratagem? And have not the fairest estates been destroyed by suretiship? South.

SURETY. n. f. [sureté, Fr.]

1. Certainty; indubitableness.

Know of a surety that thy feed shall be a stranger.
Genesis.

2. Security; safety.

There the princesses determining to bathe, thought it was so privileged a place as no body durst presume to come thither; yet, for the more surety
they looked round about. Sidney.

3. Foundation of stability; support.

We our state

Hold, as you yours, while our obedience holds;
On other surety none. Milton.

4. Evidence; ratification; confirmation.

She call'd the saints to surety,
That she would never put it from her finger,
Unless she gave it to yourself. Shakspeare.

5. Security against loss or damage; security for payment.

There remains unpaid

A hundred thousand more, in surety of the which One part of Aquitain is bound to us. Shakspeare.

6. Hostage; bondsman; one that gives security for another; one that is bound for another.

That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd
you,

One of the greatest in the christian world
Shall be my surety. Shakspeare.

I will be surety for him; of my hand shalt thou require him. Genesis.

Yet be not surety, if thou be a father;
Love is a personal debt: I cannot give My children's right, nor ought he take it. Herbert.

All, in infancy, are by others presented with the desires of the parents, and intercession of sureties, that they may be early admitted by baptism into the school of Christ. Hammond.

SURFACE. n. f. [sur and face, Fr.] Su-perficies; outside; superface. It is accented by Milton on the last syllable.

Which of us who beholds the bright surface
Of this ethereal mold, whereon we stand. Milton.

Errours like straws upon the surface flow;
He who would search for pearls must dive below. Dryden.

All their surfaces shall be truly plain, or truly spherical, and look all the same way, so as together to compose one even surface. Newton.

To SURFEIT. v. a. [from sur and faire,
Fr. to do more than enough, to overdo.]
To feed with meat or drink to satiety and sickness; to cram overmuch.

The surfeited grooms

Do mock their charge with snores. Shakspeare.

To SURFEIT. v. n. To be fed to satiety and sickness.

They are as sick that surfeit with too much, as they that starve with nothing. Shakspeare.

Take heed lest your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness. Luke.

Though some had so surfeited in the vineyards,
and with the wines, that they had been left behind,
the generosity of the Spaniards sent them all home. Clarendon.

They must be let loose to the childish play they fancy, which they should be weaned from, by being made to surfeit of it. Locke.

SURFEIT. n. f. [from the verb.] Sickness or satiety caused by overfulness.

When we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters
the sun, the moon and stars. Shakspeare.

How ill white hairs become a fool and jester!
I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
So surfeit-swell'd, so old, and so profane. Shakspeare.

SUR

Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made;
Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him. Shakspeare.

Why, disease, dost thou molest
Ladies, and of them the best?
Do not men grow sick of rites,
To thy altars, by their nights Spent in surfeits? Ben Jonson.

Surfeits many times turn to purges, both upwards and downwards. Bacon.

Peace, which he lov'd in life, did lend
Her hand to bring him to his end;
When age and death call'd for the score,
No surfeits were to reckon for. Crafozo.

Our father
Has ta'en himself a surfeit of the world,
And cries, it is not safe that we should taste it. Osway.

SURFEITER. n. f. [from surfeit.] One who riots; a glutton.

I did not think

This am'rous surfeiter would have donn'd his helm
For such a petty war. Shakspeare.

SURFEITWATER. n. f. [surfeit and water.]
Water that cures surfeits.

A little cold-distilled poppywater, which is the true surfeitwater, with ease and abstinence, often ends distempers in the beginning. Locke.

SURGE. n. f. [from surgo, Lat.] A swelling sea; wave rolling above the general surface of the water; billow; wave.

The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging surges, unruled and undirected of any. Spenser.

The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous
main,

Seems to cast water on the burning bear,
And quench the guards of the ever-fired pole:
I never did like molestation view
On the enchain'd flood. Shakspeare.

He trod the water,
Whose enmity he flung aside, and breast'd
The surge most swollen that met him. Shakspeare.

It was formerly famous for the unfortunate loves of Hero and Leander, drowned in the uncom-passionate surges. Sandys.

The sulph'rous hail Shot after us in storm, o'erblown, hath laid
The fiery surge, that from the precipice
Of heav'n receiv'd us falling. Milton.

He sweeps the skies, and clears the cloudy north:
He flies aloft, and with impetuous roar
Pursues the foaming surges to the shore. Dryden.

Thetis, near Ilium's swelling flood,
With dread beheld the rolling surges sweep
In heaps his slaughter'd sons into the deep. Pope.

To SURGE. v. n. [from surgo, Lat.] To swell; to rise high.

From midst of all the main

The surging waters like a mountain rise. Spenser.

He, all in rage, his sea-god fire besought,
Some cursed vengeance on his son to cast;
From surging gulfs two monsters straight were brought. Spenser.

The serpent mov'd, not with indented wave,
Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear,
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew,
Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton.

SURGEON. n. f. [corrupted by conversation from chirurgion.] One who cures by manual operation; one whose duty is to act in external maladies by the direction of the physician.

The wound was past the cure of a better surgeon than myself, so as I could but receive some few of her dying words. Sidney.

I meddle with no woman's matters; but withal,
I am a surgeon to old shoes. Shakspeare.

He that hath wounded his neighbour, is tied to the expences of the surgeon, and other incidencies. Taylor.

Though most sorely wounded, none were slain:
The surgeons soon despoil'd them of their arms,
And some with salves they cure. Dryden.

SURGEONRY. } n. f. [for chirurgery.] The SURGERY. } act of curing by manual operation.

It would seem very evil surgery to cut off every unsound part of the body, which, being by other due means recovered, might afterwards do good service.
Spenser.

Strangely visited people,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures. Shakspeare.
They are often tarred over with the surgery of our sheep, and would you have us kiss tar?
Shakspeare.

SURGY. adj. [from surge.] Rising in bil-lows.

Do publick or domestick cares constrain
This toilsome voyage o'er the surgy main? Pope.

SURLILY. adv. [from surly.] In a surly manner.

SURLINESS. n. f. [from surly.] Gloomy moroseness; sour anger.

Thus pale they meet; their eyes with fury burn;
None greets; for none the greeting will return;
But in dumb surliness, each arm'd with care
His foe profess, as brother of the war. Dryden.

SURLING. n. f. [from surly.] A sour morose fellow. Not used.

These four surlings are to be commended to fleur Gaulard. Camden.

SURLY. adj. [from run, four, Saxon.] Gloomily morose; rough; uncivil;
sour; silently angry.

'Tis like you'll prove a jolly surly groom,
That take it on you at the first so roundly.
Shakspeare.

That surly spirit, melancholy,
Had bak'd thy blood, and made it heavy thick,
Which else runs tickling up and down the veins,
Making that idiot laughter keep men's eyes,
And strain their cheeks to idle merriment.
Shakspeare.

Against the capitol I met a lion,
Who glar'd upon me, and went surly by,
Without annoying me. Shakspeare.

Repuls'd by surly grooms, who wait before
The sleeping tyrant's interdicted door. Dryden.

What if among the courtly tribe
You lost a place, and sav'd a bribe?
And then in surly mood came here
To fifteen hundred pounds a year,
And fierce against the whigs harangu'd?
Swift.

The zephyrs floating loose, the timely rains,
Now soften'd into joy the surly storms. Thomson.

TO SURMISE. v. a. [from surmise, Fr.] To suspect; to imagine imperfectly; to imagine without certain knowledge.

Man coveteth what exceedeth the reach of sense, yea somewhat above capacity of reason, somewhat divine and heavenly, which with hidden exultation it rather surmiseth than conceiveth: somewhat it seeketh, and what that is directly it knoweth not;
yet very intente desire thereof doth so incite it,
that all other known delights and pleasures are laid aside, and they give place to the search of this but only suspected desire. Hooker.

Of questions and strifes of words cometh envy, railings, and evil surmisings. 1 Timothy.

His presence to these narrow bounds confin'd.
Milton.

It wast'd nearer yet, and then she knew
That what before she but surmis'd, was true.
Dryden.

This change was not wrought by altering the form or position of the earth, as was surmis'd by a very learned man, but by dissolving it. Woodward.

SURMISE. n. f. [from surmise, Fr.] Imperfect notion; suspicion; imagination not supported by knowledge.

To let grow private surmises, whereby the thing itself is not made better or worse; if just and allowable reasons might lead them to do as they did, then are these censures frustrate. Hooker.

They were by law of that proud tyranness,
Provok'd with wrath, and envy's false surmise,
Condemned to that dungeon mercilefs,
Where they should live in woe, and die in wretchedness. Spenser.

My compassionate heart
Will not permit my eyes once to behold
The thing, whereat it trembles by surmise.
Shakspeare.

My thought, whose murdering yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise. Shakspeare.

No sooner did they espy the English turning from them, but they were of opinion that they fled towards their shipping: this surmise was occasioned, for that the English ships removed the day before.
Hayward.

To SUSPECT. v. a. [suspicio, suspectum, Latin.]

1. To imagine with a degree of fear and jealousy what is not known.

Nothing makes a man suspect much, more than to know little; and therefore men should remedy suspicion by procuring to know more. Bacon.

Let us not then suspect our happy state,
 As not secure. Milton.

From her hand I could suspect no ill. Milton.

2. To imagine guilty without proof.

Though many poets may suspect themselves for the partiality of parents to their youngest children, I know myself too well to be ever satisfied with my own conceptions. Dryden.

Some would persuade us that body and extension are the same thing, which changes the signification of words; which I would not suspect them of, they having so severely condemned the philosophy of others. Locke.

3. To hold uncertain; to doubt.

I cannot forbear a story which is so well attested, that I have no manner of reason to suspect the truth. Addison.

No fancy mine, no other wrong suspect,
 Make me, O virtuous shame, thy laws neglect. Sidney.

The sale of offices and towns in France,
 If they were known, as the suspect is great,
 Would make thee quickly hop without a head. Shakspeare.

My most worthy master, in whose breast
 Doubt and suspect, alas! are plac'd too late,
 You should have fear'd false times, when you did feast. Shakspeare.

There be so many false prints of praise, that a man may justly hold a suspect. Bacon.

Nothing more jealous than a favourite towards the waning time and suspect of satiety. Wotton.

They might hold sure intelligence
 Among themselves, without suspect to offend. Daniel.

If the king ends the differences, and takes away the suspect, the case will be no worse than when two duellists enter the field. Suckling.

To SUSPEND. v. a. [suspendre, Fr. suspendo, Latin.]

1. To hang; to make to hang by any thing.

As 'twixt two equal armies fate
Suspends uncertain victory;

Our souls, which, to advance our state,
 Were gone out, hung 'twixt her and me. Donne.
 It is reported by Ruffinus, that in the temple of Serapis there was an iron chariot suspended by load-stones; which stones removed, the chariot fell and was dashed to pieces. Brown.

The harmony
Suspended hell, and took with rapture
 The thronging audience. Milton.

The guard nor fights nor flies; their fate so near,
 At once suspends their courage and their fear. Denham.

The British dame, fam'd for resistless grace,
 Contents not now but for the second place;
 Our love suspended, we neglect the fair,
 For whom we burn'd, to gaze adoring here. Glanville.

4. To delay; to hinder from proceeding.

Suspend your indignation against my brother, till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent. Shakspeare.

His answer did the nymph attend;
 Her looks, her sighs, her gestures all did pray him;
 But Godfrey wisely did his grant suspend,
 He doubts the worst, and that a while did stay him. Fairfax.

To themselves I left them;
 For I suspend their doom. Milton.

The reasons for suspending the play were ill founded. Dryden.

This is the hinge on which turns the liberty of intellectual beings, in their steady prosecution of true felicity, that they can suspend this prosecution in particular cases, till they have looked before them. Locke.

5. To keep undetermined.

A man may suspend his choice from being determined for or against the thing proposed, till he has examined whether it be really of a nature to make him happy or no. Locke.

6. To debar for a time from the execution of an office or enjoyment of a revenue.

Good men should not be suspended from the exercise of their ministry, and deprived of their livelihood, for ceremonies which are on all hands acknowledged indifferent. Sanderfon.

The bishop of London was summoned for not suspending Dr. Sharp. Swift.

SUSPENSE. n. f. [suspens, Fr. suspensus, Latin.]

1. Uncertainty; delay of certainty or determination; indetermination.

Till this be done, their good affection towards the safety of the church is acceptable; but the way they prescribe us to preserve it by, must rest in suspense. Hocker.

Such true joy's suspense
 What dream can I present to recompense? Waller.

Ten days the prophet in suspense remain'd,
 Would no man's fate pronounce; at last constrain'd
 By Ithacus, he solemnly design'd Me for the sacrifice. Denham.

2. Act of withholding the judgment.

In propositions, where though the proofs in view are of most moment, yet there are sufficient grounds to suspect that there is fallacy, or proofs as considerable to be produced on the contrary side, there sus- pense or dissent are often voluntary. Locke.

Whatever necessity determines to the pursuit of real bliss, the same necessity establishes suspense, deliberation and scrutiny, whether its satisfaction
 misleads from our true happiness. Locke.

3. Stop in the midst of two opposites.

For thee the fates, severely kind, ordain
 A cool suspense from pleasure or from pain. Pope.

SUSPENSE. adj. [suspensus, Latin.]

The great light of day yet wants to run
Much of his race, though steep, suspense in heav'n Held by thy voice. Milton.

2. Held in doubt; held in expectation.

The self-same orders allowed, but yet established in more wary and suspense manner, as being to stand in force till God should give the opportunity of some general conference what might be best for every of them afterwards to do; had both prevented all occasion of just dislike which others might take, and reserved a greater liberty unto the authors themselves, of entering unto further consultation afterwards. Hooker.

This said, he sat; and expectation held
His looks suspense, awaiting who appear'd
To second or oppose. Milton.

SUSPENSION, n. f. [suspension, Fr. from suspend.]

1. Act of making to hang on any thing.
2. Act of making to depend on any thing.
3. Act of delaying.

Had we had time to pray,
With thousand vows and tears we should have fought,
That sad decree's suspension to have wrought. Waller.

4. Act of withholding or balancing the judgment.

In his Indian relations, wherein are contained incredible accounts, he is surely to be read with suspension; these are they which weakened his authorities with former ages, for he is seldom mentioned without derogatory parentheses. Brown.

The mode of the will, which answers to dubita-tion, may be called suspension; and that which in the fantastick will is obstinacy, is constancy in the intellectual. Grew.

5. Interruption; temporary cessation.

Nor was any thing done for the better adjusting things in the time of that suspension, but every thing left in the same state of unconcernedness as before. Clarendon.

6. Temporary privation of an office; as, the clerk incurred suspension.

SUSPENSORY, adj. [suspensoire, Fr. suspensus, Lat.] That by which any thing hangs.

There are several parts peculiar to brutes which are wanting in man, as the seventh or suspensory muscle of the eye. Ray.

SUSPICION, n. f. [suspicion, Fr. suspi-cio, Lat.] The act of suspecting; imagination of something ill without proof.

This suspicion Miso for the hoggish shrewdness of her brain, and Mopsa for a very unlikely envy, humbled upon. Sidney.

Suspensions amongst thoughts are like bats amongst birds, they ever fly by twilight; they are to be repressed, or at the least well guarded, for they cloud the mind. Bacon.

Suspicion all our lives shall be stuck full of eyes;
For treason is but trusted like a fox,
Who, ne'er so tame, so cherish'd and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors. Shakspeare.

Though wisdom wake, suspicion sleeps
At wisdom's gate; and to simplicity
Resigns her charge, while goodness thinks no ill
Where no ill seems. Milton.

SUSPICIOUS, adj. [suspiciosus, Latin.]

1. Inclined to suspect; inclined to imagine ill without proof.

Nature itself, after it has done an injury, will for ever be suspicious, and no man can love the person he suspects. South.

2. Indicating suspicion or fear.

A wife man will find us to be rogues by our faces:
we have a suspicious, fearful, constrained countenance, often turning and sinking through narrow lanes. Swift.

3. Liable to suspicion; giving reason to imagine ill.

They, because the light of his candle too much drowned theirs, were glad to lay hold on so colour-able matter, and exceeding forward to traduce him as an author of suspicious innovations. Hooker.

I spy a black suspicious threat'ning cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun. Shakspeare.
Authors are suspicious, nor greedily to be swallowed, who pretend to deliver antipathies, sympathies, and the occult abstrusities of things. Brown.

His life
Private, unactive, calm, contemplative,
Little suspicious to any king. Milton.

Many mischievous insects are daily at work, to make people of merit suspicious of each other. Pope.

SUSPICIOUSLY, adv. [from suspicious.]

1. With suspicion.
2. So as to raise suspicion.

His guard entering the place, found Plangus with his sword in his hand, but not naked, but standing suspiciously enough, to one already suspicious. Sidney.

SUSPICIOUSNESS, n. f. [from suspicious.]
Tendency to suspicion.

To make my estate known seemed impossible, by reason of the suspiciousness of Miso, and my young mistress. Sidney.

SUSPIRATION, n. f. [suspiratio, from suspiro, Lat.] Sigh; act of fetching the breath deep.

Not customary suits of solemn black,
Nor windy suspiration of fore'd breath,
That can denote me truly. Shakspeare.

In deep suspirations we take more large gulphs of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love or sorrow. More.

To SUSPIRE, v. n. [suspiro, Lat.]

1. To sigh; to fetch the breath deep.
2. It seems in Shakspeare to mean only, to begin to breathe; perhaps mistaken for respire.

Since the birth of Cain, the first male child,
To him that did but yesterday suspire,
There was not such a gracious creature born. Shakspeare.

To SUSTAIN, v. a. [soustenir, French;
sustineo, Latin.]

1. To bear; to prop; to hold up.

The largeness and lightness of her wings and tail sustain her without lassitude. More.

Vain is the force of man,
To crush the pillars that the pile sustain. Dryden.

2. To support; to keep from sinking under evil.

The admirable curiosity and singular excellency of this design will sustain the patience, and animate the industry, of him who shall undertake it. Holder.

3. To maintain; to keep.

What food
Will he convey up thither to sustain Himself and army? Milton.

But it on her, not she on it depends;
For she the body doth sustain and cherish. Davies.
My labour will sustain me. Milton.

4. To help; to relieve; to assist.

They charged, on pain of perpetual displeasure, neither to entreat for him, or any way sustain him. Shakspeare.

His sons, who seek the tyrant to sustain,
And long for arbitrary lords again,
He dooms to death, asserting publick right. Dryden.

5. To bear; to endure.

Can Ceyx then sustain to leave his wife,
And unconcern'd forsake the sweets of life? Dryden.
Shall Turnus then such endless toil sustain
In fighting fields, and conquer towns in vain? Dryden.

The mind stands collected within herself, and sustains the shock with all the force which is natural to her; but a heart in love has its foundations sapped. Addison.

6. To beat without yielding.

Sacharissa's beauty's wine
Which to madness doth incline;
Such a liquor as no brain
That is mortal can sustain. Waller.

7. To suffer; to bear as inflicted.

If you omit
The offer of this time, I cannot promise,
But that you shall sustain more new disgraces,
With these you bear already. Shakspeare.
Were it I thought death menac'd would entice
This my attempt, I would sustain alone
The worst and not persuade thee. Milton.

SUSTAINABLE, adj. [soustenable, French;
from sustain.] That it may be sustained.

SUSTAINER, n. f. [from sustain.]

1. One that props; one that supports.
2. One that suffers; a sufferer.

Thyself hast a sustainer been
Of much affliction in my cause. Chapman.

SUSTENANCE, n. f. [soustenance, Fr.]

1. Support; maintenance.

Scarcely allowing himself fit sustenance of life, rather than he would spend those goods for whole fake only he seemed to joy in life. Sidney.

There are to one end sundry means; as for the sustenance of our bodies many kinds of food, many sorts of raiment to clothe our nakedness. Hooker.

Is then the honour of your daughter of greater moment to her, than to my daughter her's, whose sustenance it was? Addison.

2. Necessaries of life; victuals.

The experiment cost him his life for want of sustenance. L'Estrange.
The ancients were inventors of all arts necessary to life and sustenance, as plowing and sowing. Temple.

SUSTENTATION, n. f. [sustentation, Fr.
from sustento, Latin.]

1. Support; preservation from falling.

These streams once raised above the earth, have their ascent and sustentation aloft promoted by the air. Boyle.

2. Use of victuals.

A very abstemious animal, by reason of its frigi-dity and latancy in the winter, will long subsist without a visible sustentation. Brown.

3. Maintenance; support of life.

When there be great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation; it is of necessity that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon.

SUSURRATION, n. f. [from susurro, Lat.]
Whisper; soft murmur.

SUTE, n. f. [for suite.] Sort. I believe only misprinted.

Touching matters belonging to the church of Christ, this we conceive, that they are not of one sute. Hooker.

SUTLER, n. f. [soeteler, Dutch; sudler, German.] A man that sells provisions and liquor in a camp.

I shall sutler be Unto the camp, and profits will accrue. Shakspeare.
Send to the sutler's; there your're sure to find
The bully match'd with rascals of his kind. Dryden.

SUTURE, n. f. [sutura, Latin.]

1. A manner of sewing or stitching, particularly of stitching wounds.

Wounds, if held in close contact for some time, reunite by inoculation: to maintain this situation, several sorts of sutures have been invented: those now chiefly described are the interrupted, the glovers, the quilled, the twisted and the dry sutures; but the interrupted and twisted are almost the only useful ones. Sharp.

2. A particular articulation: the bones of the cranium are joined one to another by four sutures.

Many of our vessels degenerate into ligaments, and the sutures of the skull are abolished in old age. Arbuthnot.

SWAB, n. f. [swabb, Swedish.] A kind of mop to clean floors.

To SWAB, v. a. [rpebban, Sax.] To clean with a mop. It is now used chiefly at sea.

SWA'BER. n. f. [swabber, Dutch.] A sweeper of the deck.

The master, the swabber, the boatswain and I,
 Lov'd Mall, Meg, and Marrian, and Margery.

Was any thing wanting to the extravagance of this degenerate age, but the making a tarpawlin and a swabber the hero of a tragedy? Dennis.

To SWA'DDLE. v. a. [rpedan, Saxon.]

1. To swathe; to bind in clothes, generally used of binding new-born children.

Invested by a veil of clouds,
 And swaddled as new-born in sable shrouds;
 For these a receptacle I design'd. Sandys.

How soon doth man decay!
 When cloths are taken from a chest of sweets,
 To swaddle infants, whose young breath
 Scarce knows the way;
 Those cloths are little winding sheets,
 Which do consign and send them unto death.

They swaddled me up in my night-gown with long pieces of linnen, till they had wrapt me about in a hundred yards of swathe. Addis. n.

2. To beat; to cudgel. A low ludicrous word.

Great on the bench, great in the saddle,
 That could as well bind o'er as swaddle. Hudib.

SWADDLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Clothes bound round the body.

I begged them to uncase me: no, no, say they;
 and upon that carried me to one of their houses, and put me to bed in all my swaddles. Addison.

SWADDLINGBAND. n. f. [from swad-
SWADDLINGCLOTH. n. f. [dle.] Cloth SWADDLINGCLOUT. n. f. wrapped round a new-born child.

From thence a fairy thee unweeting reft,
 There as thou slept'st in tender swaddling-band,
 And her base elfin brood there for thee left:
 Such men do changelings call, so changed by fairies theft. Spenser.

The great baby you see there is not yet out of his swaddling-clouts. Shakspeare.
 The swaddlingbands were purple, wrought with gold. Dryden.

To SWAG. v. n. [rgan, Saxon; fwegia, Islandick.] To sink down by its weight;
 to hang heavy.

They are more apt, in swagging down, to pierce with their points, than in the jacent posture, and crevice the wall. Wotton.

Being a tall fish, and with sides much compressed, he hath a long fin upon his back, and another answering to it upon his belly; by which he is the better kept upright, or from swagging on his sides. Grew.

To SWAGE. v. a. [from affwage.] To ease;
 to soften; to mitigate.

Apt words have pow'r to swage
 The tumours of a troubled mind,
 And are as balm to fester'd wounds. Milton.

Nor wanting pow'r to mitigate and swage,
 With solemn touches, troubled thoughts, and chafe
 Anguish, and doubt, and fear from mortal minds.

I will love thee:
 Though my distracted senses should forsake me,
 I'd find some intervals, when my poor heart
 Should swage itself, and be let loose to thine.

To SWAGGER. v. n. [swadder, Dut. to make a noise; rpegan, Saxon.] To bluster; to bully; to be turbulently and tumultuously proud and insolent.

Drunk? squabble? swagger? and discourse sus-tain with one's own shadow? Oh thou invincible spirit of wine? Shakspeare.

'Tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive; a rascal that swaggered with me last night. Shakspeare.

The lesser size of mortals love to swagger for opinions, and to boast infallibility of knowledge.

Glanville.

S W A

Many such asses in the world huff, look big, stare, drefs, cock, and swagger at the same noisy rate.
L'Estrange.

He chuck'd,
 And scarcely deign'd to set a foot to ground,
 But swagger'd like a lord. Dryden.

Confidence, how weakly soever founded, hath some effect upon the ignorant, who think there is something more than ordinary in a swaggering man, that talks of nothing but demonstration. Tillotson.

To be great, is not to be starched, and formal, and supercilious; to swagger at our footmen, and browbeat our inferiours. Collier.

What a pleasure is it to be victorious in a cause?
 to swagger at the bar? for a lawyer I was born,
 and a lawyer I will be. Arbutnot.

SWAGGERER. n. f. [from swagger.] A blusterer; a bully; a turbulent noisy fellow.

He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater: you may stroke him as gently as a puppy greyhound.

SWAGGY. adj. [from swag.] Dependent by its weight.

The beaver is called animal ventricosum, from his swaggy and prominent belly. Brown.

SWAIN. n. f. [rpein, Saxon and Runick.]

1. A young man.
 That good knight would not so nigh repair,
 Himself estranging from their joyance vain,
 Whose fellowship seem'd far unfit for warlike swain.
Spenser.

2. A country servant employed in husbandry.

It were a happy life
 To be no better than a homely swain. Shakspeare.

3. A pastoral youth.
 Blest swains! whose nymphs in ev'ry grace excel;
 Blest nymphs! whose swains those graces sing so well. Pope.

Leave the meer country to meer country swains,
 And dwell where life in all life's glory reigns.
Harte.

SWAINMOTE. n. f. [swainmotus, law Latin.] A court touching matters of the forest, kept by the charter of the forest thrice in the year. This court of swainmote is as incident to a forest, as the court of piepowder is to a fair.
 The swainmote is a court of freeholders within the forest. Corwell.

To SWALE. v. a. [rpele, Saxon, to
To SWEAL. v. a. kindle.] To waste or blaze away; to melt: as, the candle swales.

 water breaking in upon the miners at their work. Bailey.

SWALLOW. n. f. [rpalape, Saxon; bi- rundo.] A small bird of passage; or, as some say, a bird that lies hid and sleeps in the winter.

The swallow follows not summer more willingly than we your lordship. Shakspeare.
 Daffodils,

That comes before the swallow dares. Shakspeare.
 The swallows make use of celendine, and the linnet of euphrasia. More.

When swallows fleet soar high and sport in air,
 He told us that the welkin would be clear. Gay.

To SWALLOW. v. a. [rpelzan, Saxon; swelgen, Dutch.]

1. To take down the throat.

If little faults
 Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye, Whose capital crimes chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,

Appear before us! Shakspeare.

Men are, at a venture, of the religion of the country; and must therefore swallow down opinions, as silly people do empiricks pills, and have nothing to do but believe that they will do the cure. Locke.

2. To receive without examination.

S W A

Consider and judge of it as a matter of reason, and not swallow it without examination as a matter of faith. Locke.

3. To engross; to appropriate: often with up emphatical.

Far be it from me, that I should swallow up or destroy. 2 Samuel.

Homer excels all the inventors of other arts in this, that he has swallowed up the honour of those who succeeded him. Pope.

4. To absorb; to take in; to sink in any abyfs; to ingulf: with up.

Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches, though the yesty waves
 Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakspeare.

I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb
 Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave. Shakspeare.

Death is swallowed up in victory. Corinthians.

If the earth open her mouth, and swallow them up, ye shall understand that these men have provoked the Lord. Numbers.

In bogs swallow'd up and lost. Milton.

He hid many things from us, not that they would swallow up our understanding, but divert our attention from what is more important. Deity of Piety.

Nature would abhor
 To be forced back again upon herself,
 And like a whirlpool swallow her own streams.

Dryden.

Should not the sad occasion swallow up
 My other cares, and draw them all into it? Addis.

5. To occupy.
 The necessary provision for life swallows the greatest part of their time. Locke.

 wine. Isaiah.

8. Swallow implies, in all its figurative senses, some nauseous or contemptuous idea, something of grossness or of folly.

SWALLOW. n. f. [from the verb.] The throat; voracity.

Had this man of merit and mortification been called to account for his ungodly swallow, in gorging down the estates of helpless widows and orphans, he would have told them that it was all for charitable uses. South.

SWALLOWTAIL. n. f. A species of willow.
 The shining willow they call swallowtail, because of the pleasure of the leaf. Bacon.

SWALLOWWORT. n. f. [asclepia.] A plant.

SWAMP. n. f. [swamms, Gothick; rpan, Saxon; suamm, Islandick; swamme, Dut. suomp, Danish; swamp, Swedish.] A marsh; a bog; a fen.

SWAMPY. adj. [from swamp.] Boggy;
 fenny.

Swampy fens breathe destructive myriads.
Thomson.

SWAN. n. f. [rpan, Saxon; swan, Danish;
swaen, Dutch; cycnus, Latin.]

The swan is a large water-fowl, that has a long neck, and is very white, excepting when it is young.
 Its legs and feet are black, as is its bill, which is like that of a goose, but something rounder, and a little hooked at the lower end of it: the two sides below its eyes are black and shiny like ebony.
Swans use wings like sails, which catch the wind, so that they are driven along in the water. They feed upon herbs and some sort of grain like a goose, and some are said to have lived three hundred years.
 There is a species of swans with the feathers of their heads, towards the breast, marked at the ends with a gold colour inclining to red. The swan is reckoned by Moses among the unclean creatures; but it was consecrated to Apollo the god of musick, because it was said to sing melodiously when it was near expiring; a tradition generally received, but fabulous.

Caimet.

With untainted eye
Compare her face with some that I shall show,
And I will make thee think thy swan a crow.

Let musick sound, while he doth make his choice;
Then if he lose, he makes a swan-like end.

The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry,
Old feeble men with fainter groans reply;
A jarring sound results, and mingles in the sky,
Like that of swans remurm'ring to the floods.

The idea which an Englishman signifies by the name swan, is a white colour, long neck, black beak, black legs, and whole feet, and all these of a certain size, with a power of swimming in the water, and making a certain kind of noise.

SWA'NSKIN. n. f. [swan and skin.] A kind of soft flannel, imitating for warmth the down of a swan.

SWAP. adv. [ad suipa, to do at a snatch, Islandick.] Hastily; with hasty violence: as, he did it swap. It seems to be of the same original with sweep. A low word.

To SWAP. v. a. To exchange. See To SWOP.

SWARD. n. f. [sward, Swedish.]

1. The skin of bacon.

2. The surface of the ground: whence green sward, or green sward.

Water kept too long loosens and softens the sward, makes it subject to rushes and coarse grass.

The noon of night was past, and then the foe
Came dreadful o'er the level swart, that lies Between the wood and the swift streaming Ouse.

To plant a vineyard in July, when the earth is very dry and combustible, plow up the swarth, and burn it.

SWARE. The preterit of swear.

SWARM. n. f. [ryearm, Saxon; swerm, Dutch.]

1. A great body or number of bees, or other small animals, particularly those bees that migrate from the hive.

A swarm of bees that cut the liquid sky,
Upon the topmost branch in clouds alight.

2. A multitude; a crowd.

From this swarm of fair advantages,
You grip'd the general sway into your hand.

If we could number up those prodigious swarms that had settled themselves in every part of it, they would amount to more than can be found.

This swarm of themes that settles on my pen,
Which I, like summer-flies, shake off again,
Let others sing.

To SWARM. v. n. [ryearman, Saxon; swermen, Dutch.]

1. To rise as bees in a body, and quit the hive.

All hands employ'd,
Like labouring bees on a long summer's day;
Some sound the trumpet for the rest to swarm.

Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spied.
When bees hang in swarming time, they will presently rise, if the weather hold.

2. To appear in multitudes; to crowd; to throng.

The merciless Maedonel,
The multiplying villanies of nature
Do swarm upon.

Our superfluous lacqueys, and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle.

What a multitude of thoughts at once Awaken'd in me swarm, while I consider
What from within I feel myself, and hear
What from without comes often to my ears!

Then mounts the throne, high plac'd before the throne;

In crowds around the swarming people join.

3. To be crowded; to be overrun; to be thronged.

These garrisons you have now planted throughout all Ireland, and every place swarms with soldiers.

Her lower region swarms with all sort of fowl,
her rivers with fish, and her seas with whole shoals.

Those days swarmed with fables, and from such grounds took hints for fictions, poisoning the world ever after.

Life swarms with ills, the boldest are afraid,
Where then is safety for a tender maid?

4. To breed multitudes.

Not so thick swarm'd once the soil
Bedropp'd with blood of Gorgon.

5. It is used in conversation for climbing a tree, by embracing it with the arms and legs.

SWART. } adj. [swarts, Gothick; SWARTH. } [ryear, Saxon; swart, Dutch.]

1. Black; darkly brown; tawny.

A nation strange, with visage swart,
And courage fierce, that all men did affray,
Through the world then swarm'd in every part.

A man
Of swarth complexion, and of crabbed hue,
That him full of melancholy did shew.

Whereas I was black and swarth before;
With those clear rays which she infus'd on me,
That beauty am I blest with, which you see.

No goblin, or swart fairy of the mine,
Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity.

2. In Milton it seems to signify gloomy; malignant.

Ye valleys low,
On whose fresh lap the swart star sparsely looks.

To SWART. v. a. [from the noun.] To blacken; to dusk.

The heat of the sun may swart a living part, or even black a dead or dissolving flesh.

SWARTHILY. adv. [from swarthy.] Blackly; duskily; tawnily.

SWARTHINESS. n. f. [from swarthy.] Darkness of complexion; tawnyness.

SWARTHLY. adj. [See SWART.] Dark of complexion; black; dusky; tawny.

Set me where, on some pathless plain,
The swarthy Africans complain.

Though in the torrid climates the common colour is black or swarthy, yet the natural colour of the temperate climates is more transparent and beautiful.

Here swarthy Charles appears, and there
His brother with dejected air.

Did they know Cato, our remotest kings
Would pour embattled multitudes about him;
Their swarthy hosts would darken all our plains,
Doubling the native horror of the war,
And making death more grim.

SWASH. n. f. [A cant word.] A figure, whose circumference is not round, but oval; and whose moldings lie not at right angles, but oblique to the axis of the work.

SWASH. n. f. [from the verb.] Impulse of water flowing with violence.

To SWASH. v. n. To make a great clatter or noise: whence swashbuckler. Not in use.

We'll have a *swash*ing and a martial outsize,
As many other mannish cowards have,
That do outface it with their semblances.
Draw, if you be men: Gregory, remember thy *swash*ing blow.

SWA'SHER. n. f. [from swash.] One who makes a show of valour or force of arms. Obsolete.

I have observed these three swashers; three such antics do not amount to a man.

SWATCH. n. f. A swath. Not in use.
One spreadeth those bands so in order to lie,
As barlie in swatches may fill it thereby.

SWATH. n. f. [swade, Dutch.]

1. A line of grass cut down by the mower, with tossing and raking, and setting on cox, Grass, lately in swatches, is meat for an ox.
The strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's swath.

As soon as your grass is mown, if it lie thick in the swath, neither air nor sun can pass freely through it.

2. A continued quantity.

An affection'd ass, that cons state without book,
and utters it by great swaths.

3. [ryedan, to bind, Saxon.] A band; a fillet.

An Indian comb, a stick whereof is cut into three sharp and round teeth four inches long: the other part is left for the handle, adorned with fine straws laid along the sides, and lapped round about it in several distinct swaths.

Long pieces of linen they folded about me, till they had wrapped me in above an hundred yards of swathe.

To SWATHE. v. a. [ryedan, Saxon.] To bind, as a child with bands and rollers.

He had two sons; the eldest of them at three years old,

I th' swathing cloaths the other, from their nursery Were stol'n.

Their children are never swathed, or bound about with any thing, when they are first born; but are put naked into the bed with their parents to lie.

Swath'd in her lap the bold nurse bore him out,
With olive branches cover'd round about.

Matter's feet are swath'd no longer,
If in the night too oft he kicks,
Or shews his loco-motive tricks.

To SWAY. v. a. [schweben, German, to move.]

1. To wave in the hand; to move or wield any thing massy: as, to sway the sceptre.

Glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
As sparkles from the anvil rise,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd.

2. To bias; to direct to either side.

Heav'n forgive them, that so much have sway'd
Your majesty's good thoughts away from me.

I took your hands: but was, indeed,
Sway'd from the point, by looking down on Caesar.

The only way t' improve our own,
By dealing faithfully with none;
As bows run true by being made
On purpose false, and to be sway'd.

When examining these matters, let not temporal and little advantages sway you against a more durable interest.

3. To govern; to rule; to overpower; to influence.

The lady's mad: yet if 'twere so,
She could not sway her house, command her followers,

With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing.

The will of man is by his reason sway'd;
And reason says you are the worthier maid.

On Europe thence, and where Rome was to sway
The world.

A gentle nymph, not far from hence,
That with moist curb sways the smooth Severn stream,
Sabrina is her name.

Take heed lest passion sway
 Thy judgment to do ought, which else free will Would not admit. Milton.
 The judgment is sway'd by passion, and stored with lubricous opinions, instead of clearly conceived truths. Glanville.

This was the race
 To sway the world, and land and sea subdued. Dryd.
 With these I went,
 Nor idle stood with unassisting hands,
 When savage beasts, and men's more savage bands,
 Their virtuous toil subdu'd; yet those I sway'd
 With pow'rful speech: I spoke, and they obey'd. Dryden.

They will do their best to persuade the world that no man acts upon principle, that all is swayed by particular malice. Davenant.

To SWAY. v. n.

1. To hang heavy; to be drawn by weight.
 In these personal respects, the balance sways on our part. Bacon.

2. To have weight; to have influence.
 The example of fundry churches, for approbation of one thing, doth sway much; but yet still as having the force of an example only, and not of a law. Hooker.

3. To bear rule; to govern.
 The mind I sway by, and the heart I bear,
 Shall never sag with doubt, nor shake with fear. Shakspeare.

Hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,
 They never then had sprung like summer flies. Shakspeare.

Aged tyranny sways not as it hath power, but as it is suffered. Shakspeare.

Here thou shalt monarch reign;
 There didst not; there let him still victor sway. Milton.

SWAY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The swing or sweep of a weapon.
 To strike with huge two-handed sway. Milton.

2. Any thing moving with bulk and power.

 Shakes like a thing unfirm? Shakspeare.

3. Weight; preponderation; cast of the balance.

Expert

When to advance, or stand, or turn the sway
 Of battle. Milton.

4. Power; rule; dominion.
 This sort had some fear that the filling up the seats in the consistory with so great number of laymen, was but to please the minds of the people, to the end they might think their own sway somewhat. Hooker.

Only retain

The name and all th' addition to a king;
 The sway, revenue, execution of th' heit,
 Beloved sons, be yours. Shakspeare.

Her father counts it dangerous
 That she should give her sorrow so much sway,
 And in his wisdom hastes our marriage,
 To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakspeare.

Too truly Tamerlane's successors they;
 Each thinks a world too little for his sway. Dryden.

When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
 The post of honour is a private station. Addison.

5. Influence; direction; weight on one side.

In the end, very few excepted, all became subject
 to the sway of time: other odds there was none, saving that some fell sooner, and some later, from the soundness of belief. Hooker.

An evil mind in authority doth not only follow the sway of the desires already within it, but frames to itself new desires not before thought of. Sidney.

They rush along, the rattling woods give way,
 The branches bend before their sweepy sway. Dryden.

To SWEAR. v. n. pret. swore or sware;
 part. pass. sworn. [swaran, Gothick;
swepian, Saxon; swereen, Dutch.]

1. To obtest some superiour power; to utter an oath.

If a man vow a vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word. Numbers.

Thee, thee an hundred languages shall claim,
 And savage Indians swear by Anna's name. Ticket.

2. To declare or promise upon oath.
 We shall have old swearing
 That they did give the rings away to men;
 But we'll outface them, and outswear them too. Shakspeare.

I gave my love a ring, and made him swear
 Never to part with it; and here he stands,
 I dare be sworn for him, he would not leave it,
 Nor pluck it from his finger. Shakspeare.

I would have kept my word;
 But, when I swear, it is irrevocable. Shakspeare.
 Jacob said, swear to me; and he swore unto him. Genesis.

Bacchus taken at Rhodes by Demetrius Polior-cetes, which he so esteemed, that, as Plutarch reports, he swore he had rather lose all his father's images than that table. Peacham.

 At what ease
 Might corrupt minds procure knaves as corrupt
 To swear against you! Shakspeare.

4. To obtest the great name profanely.
 Because of swearing the land mourneth. Jer.
 Obey thy parents, keep thy word justly;
Swear not. Shakspeare.

None so nearly disposed to scoffing at religion, as those who have accustomed themselves to swear on trifling occasions. Tillotson.

Hark! the shrill notes transpire the yielding air,
 And teach the neighb'ring echoes how to swear. Young.

To SWEAR. v. a.

1. To put to an oath; to bind by an oath administred.

Moses took the bones of Joseph; for he had straitly sworn the children of Israel. Exodus.

Sworn ashore, man, like a duck; I can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn. Shakspeare.

Let me swear you all to secrecy;
 And, to conceal my shame, conceal my life. Dryd.

2. To declare upon oath: as, he swore treason against his friend.

3. To obtest by an oath.
 Now, by Apollo, king, thou swear'st thy gods in vain.
 —O vassal! miscreant! Shakspeare.

SWE'ARER. n. s. [from swear.] A wretch who obtests the great name wantonly and profanely.

And must they all be hang'd that swear and lie!
 —Every one.

—Who must hang them?
 —Why, the honest men.

—Then the liars and swearers are fools; for there are liars and swearers enow to beat the honest men, and hang them up. Shakspeare.

Take not his name, who made thy mouth, in vain:

It gets thee nothing, and hath no excuse;
 Lust and wine plead a pleasure, avarice a gain;

But the cheap swearer through his open sluice
 Lets his soul run for naught. Herbert.

Of all men a philosopher should be no swearer;
 for an oath, which is the end of controversies in law, cannot determine any here, where reason only must induce. Brown.

It is the opinion of our most refined swearers, that the same oath or curse cannot, consistently with true politeness, be repeated above nine times in the same company by the same person. Swift.

SWEAT. n. s. [speat, Saxon; sweet,
 Dutch.]

1. The matter evacuated at the pores by heat or labour.

Sweat is salt in taste; for that part of the nourishment which is fresh and sweet, turneth into blood and flesh; and the sweat is that part which is ex-cerned. Bacon.

Some insensible effluvia, exhaling out of the stone, comes to be checked and condensed by the air on the superficies of it, as it happens to sweat on the skins of animals. Boyle.

Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid
 In balmy sweat. Milton.

When Lucilius brandishes his pen,
 And flashes in the face of guilty men,
 A cold sweat stands in drops on ev'ry part,
 And rage succeeds to tears, revenge to smart. Dryd.
Sweat is produced by changing the balance between the fluids and solids, in which health consists, so as that projectile motion of the fluids overcome the resistance of the solids. Arbutnot.

2. Labour; toil; drudgery.
 This painful labour of abridging was not easy, but a matter of sweat and watching. 2 Maccabees.

The field
 To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd. Milton.

What from Jonson's oil and sweat did flow,
 Or what more easy nature did bestow
 On Shakespeare's gentler muse, in thee full grown Their graces both appear. Denham.

3. Evaporation of moisture.
 Beans give in the mow; and therefore those that are to be kept are not to be thrashed till March, that they have had a thorough sweat in the mow. Mortimer.

To SWEAT. v. n. preterit swet, sweated;
 part. pass. sweaten. [from the noun.]

1. To be moist on the body with heat or labour.

Let them be free, marry them to your heirs,
 Why sweat they under burthens? Shakspeare.

Mistress Page at the door, sweating and blowing, and looking wildly, would needs speak with you. Shakspeare.

When he was brought again to the bar, to hear
 His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stirr'd
 With such an agony, he sweat extremely. Shakspeare.

About this time in Autumn, there reigned in the city and other parts of the kingdom a disease then new; which, of the accidents and manner thereof, they called the sweating sickness. Bacon.

A young tall squire
 Did from the camp at first before him go;
 At first he did, but scarce could follow strait,
Sweating beneath a shield's unruly weight. Cowley.

2. To toil; to labour; to drudge.

How the drudging goblin swet
 To earn his cream bowl duly set;
 When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
 His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn. Milton.

Our author, not content to see That others write as carelessly as he;
 Though he pretends not to make things complete,
 Yet, to please you, he'd have the poets sweat. Waller.

3. To emit moisture.

Wainscots will sweat so that they run with water. Bacon.

In cold evenings there will be a moisture or sweat- ing upon the stool. Mortimer.

To SWEAT. v. a.

The rabblement houted and clapp'd their chopp'd hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps. Shakspeare.

A sweaty reaper from his tillage brought
 First-fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf. Milton.

2. Consisting of sweat.

And then, so nice, and so genteel,
 Such cleanliness from head to heel,
 No humours gross, or frowly steams,
 No noisome whiffs, or sweaty steams. Swift.

3. Laborious; toilsome.

Those who labour
 The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe,
 Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleening armour, Acknowledge Vulcan's aid. Prior.

To SWEEP. v. a. pret. and part. pass. swept.
[rpapan, Saxon.]

1. To drive away with a besom.
2. To clean with a besom.

What woman, having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one, doth not sweep the house, and seek diligently till she find it? Luke.

3. To carry with pomp.

Let frantick Talbot triumph for a while,
And, like a peacock, sweep along his tail. Shaksp.

4. To drive or carry off with celerity and violence.

Though I could,
With barefac'd power, sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not. Shaksp.

The river of Kishon swept them away. Judges.
The blustering winds striving for victory swept the snow from off the tops of those high mountains, and cast it down unto the plains in such abundance, that the Turks lay as men buried alive. Knolles.

Flying bullets now
To execute his rage appear too slow;
They miss or sweep but common souls away;
For such a loss Opdam his life must pay. Waller.

My looking is the fire of pestilence,
That sweeps at once the people and the prince. Dryden.

I have already swept the stakes, and with the common good fortune of prosperous gamesters can be content to sit. Dryden.

Is this the man who drives me before him
To the world's ridge, and sweeps me off like rubbish? Dryden.

Fool! time no change of motion knows;
With equal speed the torrent flows
To sweep fame, power, and wealth away;
The past is all by death possest,
And frugal fate that guards the rest,
By giving, bids them live, to-day. Fenton.

A duke holding in a great many hands, drew a huge heap of gold; but never observed a sharper, who under his arm swept a great deal of it into his hat. Swift.

5. To pass over with celerity and force.

6. To rub over.

Their long descending train
With rubies edg'd and sapphires, swept the plain. Dryden.

7. To strike with a long stroke.

Descend, ye nine; descend, and sing;
The breathing instrument inspire,
Wake into voice each silent string,
And sweep the sounding lyre. Pope.

To SWEEP. v. n.

1. To pass with violence, tumult, or swiftmess. Perhaps in the first quotation we should read swoop.

Haste me to know it, that I with wings as swift
As meditation or the thoughts of love
May sweep to my revenge. Shaksp.

A poor man that oppresseth the poor, is like a sweeping rain which leaveth no food. Proverbs.

Cowen in her course
Tow'rd the Sabrianian shores, as sweeping from her source, Takes Towa. Drayton.

Before tempestuous winds arise,
Stars shooting through the darkness gild the night
With sweeping glories, and long trails of light. Dryden.

2. To pass with pomp; to pass with an equal motion.

She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies,
More like an empress than duke Humphrey's wife. Shaksp.

In gentle dreams I often will be by,
And sweep along before your closing eye. Dryden.

3. To move with a long reach.

Nor always errs; for oft the gauntlet draws
A sweeping stroke along the crackling jaws. Dryd.

SWEEP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of sweeping.
2. The compass of any violent or continued motion.

A door drags, when, by its ill hanging on hinges, or by the ill boarding of the room, the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor. Moxon.

A torrent swell'd

With wintry tempests, that disdains all mounds, Breaking away impetuous, and involves Within its sweep, trees, houses, men. Philips.

3. Violent and general destruction.

In countries subject to great epidemical sweeps, men may live very long; but where the proportion of the chronical distemper is great, it is not likely to be so. Graunt.

4. Direction of any motion not rectilinear.

Having made one incision a little circularly, begin a second, bringing it with an opposite sweep to meet the other. Sharp.

SWEEP'ER. n. s. [from sweep.] One that sweeps.

SWEEPINGS. n. s. [from sweep.] That which is swept away.

Should this one broomstick enter the scene, covered with dust, though the sweepings of the finest lady's chamber, we should despise its vanity. Swift.

SWEEP'NET. n. s. [sweep and net.] A net that takes in a great compass.

She was the sweepnet for the Spanish ships, which happily fell into her net. Camden.

SWEEP'STAKE. n. s. [sweep and stake.]
A man that wins all.

Is't writ in your revenge,
That sweepstake you will draw both friend and foe,
Winner and loser? Shaksp.

SWEEP'PY. adj. [from sweep.] Passing with great speed and violence over a great compass at once.

They rush along, the rattling woods give way,
The branches bend before their sweepy sway. Dryden.

SWEET. adj. [rpete, Sax. foet, Dutch.]

1. Pleasing to any sense.

Sweet expresses the pleasant perceptions of almost every sense; sugar is sweet, but it hath not the same sweetness as musick; nor hath musick the sweetness of a rose, and a sweet prospect differs from them all: nor yet have any of these the same sweetness as discourse, counsel, or meditation hath; yet the royal psalmist faith of a man, we took sweet counsel together: and of God, my meditation of him shall be sweet. Watts.

2. Luscious to the taste.

This honey tasted still is ever sweet. Davies.

3. Fragrant to the smell.

Balm his foul head with warm distilled waters,
And burn sweet wood, to make the lodging sweet. Shaksp.

Where a rainbow hangeth over or toucheth, there breatheth a sweet smell; for that this happeneth but in certain matters which have some sweetness, which the dew of the rainbow draweth forth. Bacon.

Shred very small with thyme, sweet-margory, and a little winter savoury. Walton.

The balmy zephyrs, silent since her death,
Lament the ceasing of a sweeter breath. Pope.

The streets with treble voices ring,
To sell the bounteous product of the spring;
Sweet-smelling flowers, and elders early bud. Gay.

4. Melodious to the ear.

The dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milton.

Her speech is grac'd with sweeter sound
Than in another's song is found. Waller.

No more the streams their murmurs shall forbear,

A sweeter musick than their own to hear;
But tell the reeds, and tell the vocal shore,
Fair Daphne's dead, and musick is no more. Pope.

5. Beautiful to the eye.

Heav'n blest thee;
Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on. Shaksp.

6. Not salt.

The white of an egg, or blood mingled with salt water, gathers the saltness, and maketh the water sweeter; this may be by adhesion. Bacon.

The sails drop with rain,
Sweet waters mingle with the briny main. Dryden.

7. Not four.

Time changeth fruits from more four to more sweet; but contrariwise liquors, even those that are of the juice of fruit, from more sweet to more four. Bacon.

Trees whose fruit is acid last longer than those whose fruit is sweet. Bacon.

When metals are dissolved in acid menstrua, and the acids in conjunction with the metal, act after a different manner, so that the compound has a different taste, much milder than before, and sometimes a sweet one; is it not because the acids adhere to the metallic particles, and thereby lose much of their activity? Newton.

8. Mild; soft; gentle.

Let me report to him
Your sweet dependency, and you shall find
A conqueror that will pray in aid for kindness. Shaksp.

The Pleiades before him danc'd, Shedding sweet influence. Milton.

Mercy has, could Mercy's self be seen,
No sweeter look than this propitious queen. Waller.

Have tasted vengeance, and the sweets of blood, Speak. Dryden.

Can Ceyx then sustain to leave his wife,
And unconcern'd forsake the sweets of life? Dryden.

We have so great an abhorrence of pain, that a little of it extinguishes all our pleasures; a little bitter mingled in our cup leaves no relish of the sweet. Locke.

Love had ordain'd that it was Abra's turn
To mix the sweets, and minister the urn. Prior.

2. A word of endearment.

Sweet! leave me here a while;
My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. Shaksp.

Wherefore frowns my sweet?
Have I too long been absent from these lips? Ben. Jon.

3. A perfume.

As, in perfumes,
'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost;
Nor this part musick or civit can we call,
Or amber, but a rich result of all:
So she was all a sweet. Dryden.

Flowers
Innumerable, by the soft south-west
Open'd, and gather'd by religious hands,
Rebound their sweets from th' odoriferous pavement. Prior.

SWEET'BREAD. n. s. The pancreas of the calf.

Never tie yourself always to eat meats of easy
digesture, as veal, pullets, or sweetbreads. Harvey.

Sweetbread and collops were with skewers prick'd
About the sides; imbibing what they deck'd. Dryden.

When you roast a breast of veal, remember your sweetheart the butler loves a sweetbread. Swift.

I'll sweeten thy sad grave. Shakespeare.

Be humbly minded, know your post;
Sweeten your tea, and watch your toast. Swift.

2. To make mild or kind.

All kindneses descend upon such a temper, as rivers of fresh waters falling into the main sea; the sea swallows them all, but is not changed or sweetened by them. South.

Devotion softens his heart, enlightens his mind, sweetens his temper, and makes every thing that comes from him instructive, amiable, and affecting. Larv.

3. To make less painful.

She, the sweetness of my heart, even sweetens the death which her sweetness brought upon me. Sidney.

Thou shalt secure her helpless sex from harms,
And she thy cares will sweeten with her charms. Dryden.

Interest of state and change of circumstances may have sweetened these reflections to the politer sort, but impressions are not so easily worn out of the minds of the vulgar. Addison.

Thy mercy sweet'ned ev'ry soil,
Made ev'ry region please;
The hoary Alpin hills it warm'd,
And smooth'd the Tyrrhene seas. Spectator.

4. To palliate; to reconcile.

These lessons may be gilt and sweetened as we order pills and potions, so as to take off the disgust of the remedy. L'Estrange.

That must destroy thee.
Shakespeare.

Each man took his sword, and slew all the males.
Genesis.

But the sword
Of Michael from the armoury of God
Was giv'n him temper'd so, that neither keen Nor solid might resist that edge: it met
The sword of Satan with steep force to smite Descending, and in half cut sheer; not stay'd,
But with swift wheel reverse, deep ent'ring shar'd
All his right side: then Satan first knew pain,
And writh'd him to and fro convolv'd; so sore
The griding sword with discontinuous wound
Pass'd through him.
Milton.

phanta, Latin] A talebearer; a makebate; a malicious parasite.

Accusing sycophants of all men, did best sort to his nature; but therefore not seeming sycophants, because of no evil they said, they could bring any new or doubtful thing unto him, but such as already he had been apt to determine; so as they came but as proofs of his wisdom, fearful and more secure, while the fear he had figur'd in his mind had any possibility of event.
Sidney.

SYL

SYLLA'BICALLY. adv. [from syllabical.] In a syllabical manner.

SYLLABLE. n. f. [συλλαβή; syllabe, French.]

1. As much of a word as is uttered by the help of one vowel, or one articulation.

I heard
Each syllable that breath made up between them.

There is that property in all letters of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it.

2. Any thing proverbially concise.

Abraham, Job, and the rest that lived before any syllable of the law of God was written, did they not sin as much as we do in every action not commanded?

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death.

He hath told so many melancholy stories, without one syllable of truth, that he hath blunted the edge of my fears.

To SYLLABLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To utter; to pronounce; to articulate.

Airy tongues that syllable men's names
On sands and shores, and desert wildernesses.

SYLLABUB. n. f. [rightly SILLABUB, which see.] Milk and acids.

No syllabubs made at the milking pail,
But what are compos'd of a pot of good ale.

Two lines would express all they say in two pages: 'tis nothing but whipt syllabus and froth, without solidity.

SYLLABUS. n. f. [συλλαβή.] An abstract; a compendium containing the heads of a discourse.

SYLLOGISM. n. f. [συλλογισμός; syllogism, French.] An argument composed of three propositions: as, every man thinks; Peter is a man, therefore Peter thinks.

A piece of rhetoric is a sufficient argument of logic, an apologue of Æsop beyond a syllogism in Barbara.

What a miraculous thing should we count it, if the flint and the steel, instead of a few sparks, should chance to knock out definitions and syllogisms!

SYLLOGISTICAL. } adj. [συλλογιστικός; SYLLOGISTICK. } from syllogism.] Retaining to a syllogism; consisting of a syllogism.

Though we suppose subject and predicate, and copula, and propositions and syllogistical connexions in their reasoning, there is no such matter; but the intire business is at the same moment present with them, without deducing one thing from another.

Though the terms of propositions may be complex, yet where the composition of the whole argument is thus plain, simple, and regular, it is properly called a simple syllogism, since the complexion does not belong to the syllogistical form of it.

SYLLOGISTICALLY. adv. [from syllogistical.] In the form of a syllogism.

A man knows first, and then he is able to prove syllogistically; so that syllogism comes after knowledge, when a man has no need of it.

To SYLLOGIZE. v. n. [syllogizer, French; συλλογίζειν.] To reason by syllogism.

Logick is, in effect, an art of syllogizing.

Men have endeavoured to transform logic into a kind of mechanism, and to teach boys to syllogize, or frame arguments and refute them, without real knowledge.

SYLVAN. adj. [better silvan.] Woody; shady; relating to woods.

Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm,
A silvan scene! and, as the ranks ascend,
Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of stateliest view.

Eternal greens the mossy margin grace,
Watch'd by the silvan genius of the place.

SYLVAN. n. f. [silvain, French.] A wood-god, or fatyr; perhaps sometimes a rustick.

Her private orchards, wall'd on ev'ry side,
To lawless silvans all access deny'd.

SYMBOL. n. f. [symbole, Fr. σύμβολον; symbolum, Latin.]

1. An abstract; a compendium; a comprehensive form.

Beginning with the symbol of our faith, upon that the author of the glois enquires into the nature of faith.

2. A type; that which comprehends in its figure a representation of something else.

Salt, as incorruptible, was the symbol of friendship; which, if it casually fell, was accounted ominous, and their amity of no duration.

Words are the signs and symbols of things; and as, in accounts, cyphers and figures pass for real sums, so words and names pass for things themselves.

The heathens made choice of these lights as apt symbols of eternity, because, contrary to all sublunary beings, though they seem to perish every night, they renew themselves every morning.

SYMBOLICAL. adj. [symbolique, French; συμβολικός; from symbol.] Representative; typical; expressing by signs; comprehending something more than itself.

By this encroachment idolatry first crept in, men converting the symbolical use of idols into their proper worship, and receiving the representation of things unto them as the substance and thing itself.

The sacrament is a representation of Christ's death, by such symbolical actions as himself appointed.

SYMBOLICALLY. adv. [from symbolical.] Typically; by representation.

This distinction of animals was hieroglyphical, in the inward sense implying an abstinence from certain vices, symbolically intimated from the nature of those animals.

It symbolically teaches our duty, and promotes charity by a real signature, and a sensible sermon.

SYMBOLIZATION. n. f. [from symbolize.] The act of symbolizing; representation; resemblance.

The hieroglyphical symbols of scripture, excellently intended in the species of things sacrificed in the dreams of Pharaoh, are oftentimes racked beyond their symbolizations.

SYM

To SYMBOLIZE. v. n. [symbolizer, Fr. from symbol.] To have something in common with another by representative qualities.

Our king finding himself to symbolize in many things with that king of the Hebrews, honoured him with the title of this foundation.

The pleasing of colour symbolizeth with the pleasing of any single tone to the ear; but the pleasing of order doth symbolize with harmony.

Aristotle and the schools have taught, that air and water, being symbolizing elements, in the quality of moisture, are easily transmutable into one another.

They both symbolize in this, that they love to look upon themselves through multiplying glasses.

I affectedly symbolized in careless mirth and freedom with the libertines, to circumvent libertinism.

The soul is such, that it strangely symbolizes with the thing it mightily desires.

To SYMBOLIZE. v. a. To make representative of something.

Some symbolize the same from the mystery of its colours.

SYMMETRIAN. n. f. [from symmetry.] One eminently studious of proportion.

His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetriens would allow.

SYMMETRICAL. adj. [from symmetry.] Proportionate; having parts well adapted to each other.

SYMMETRIST. n. f. [from symmetry.] One very studious or observant of proportion.

Some exact symmetrists have been blamed for being too true.

SYMMETRY. n. f. [symmetrie, Fr. συμμετρία and μέτρον.] Adaption of parts to each other; proportion; harmony; agreement of one part to another.

She by whose lines proportion should be Examined, measure of all symmetry; Whom had that ancient seen, who thought souls made

Of harmony, he would at next have said
That harmony was she.
And in the symmetry of her parts is found
A pow'r, like that of harmony and sound.

Symmetry, equality, and correspondence of parts, is the discernment of reason, not the object of sense.

Nor were they only animated by him, but their measure and symmetry were owing to him.

SYMPATHE'TICAL. } adj. [sympathetique, SYMPATHE'TIC. } Fr. from sympathy.] Having mutual sensation; being affected either by what happens to the other; feeling in consequence of what another feels.

Hereupon are grounded the gross mistakes in the cure of diseases, not only from sympathetick receipts, but amulets, charms, and all incantatory applications.

United by this sympathetick bond,
You grow familiar, intimate, and fond.

To confer at the distance of the Indies by sympathetick conveyances, may be as usual to future times as to us in a literary correspondence.

To you our author makes her soft request,
Who speak the kindest, and who write the best:
Your sympathetick hearts she hopes to move,
From tender friendship and endearing love.

All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves, and sympathetick and vital passions produced within ourselves.

SYMPATHE'TICALLY. adv. [from sympathetick.] With sympathy; in consequence of sympathy.

To SY'MPATHIZE. v. n. [sympathiser, Fr. from sympathy.]

1. To feel with another; to feel in consequence of what another feels; to feel mutually.

The men sympathize with the mastiffs in robustious and rough coming on. Shakspeare.

The thing of courage,
As rou'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize.
Shakspeare.

Nature, in awe to him,
Hath doff'd her gaudy trim,
With her great master so to sympathize. Milton.

The limbs of his body is to every one a part of himself: he sympathizes, and is concerned for them. Locke.

Their countrymen were particularly attentive to all their story, and sympathized with their heroes in all their adventures. Spektator.

Though the greatness of their mind exempts them from fear, yet none condole and sympathize more heartily. Collier.

2. To agree; to fit. Not proper.
Green is a pleasing colour, from a blue and a yellow mixed together, and by consequence blue and yellow are two colours which sympathize. Dryden.

SY'MPATHY. n. f. [sympathie, Fr. συμπάθεια.] Fellow-feeling; mutual sensibility; the quality of being affected by the affection of another.

A world of earthly blessings to my soul,
If sympathy of love unite our thoughts. Shakspeare.

You are not young; no more am I: go to, then, there's sympathy: you are merry, so am I; ha! ha! then there's more sympathy: you love sack, and so do I; would you desire better sympathy? Shakspeare.

But what it is,
The action of my life is like it, which I'll keep,
If but for sympathy. Shakspeare.

I started back;
It started back: but, pleas'd, I soon return'd;
Pleas'd it return'd as soon, with answering looks
Of sympathy and love. Milton.

They saw, but other sight instead, a crowd
Of ugly serpents; horror on them fell,
And horrid sympathy. Milton.

Or sympathy, or some connat'ral force,
Pow'rful at greatest distance to unite,
With secret amity, things of like kind,
By secretest conveyance. Milton.

There never was any heart truly great and generous, that was not also tender and compassionate: it is this noble quality that makes all men to be of one kind; for every man would be a distinct species to himself, were there no sympathy among individuals. South.

Can kindness to desert like your's be strange?
Kindness by secret sympathy is ty'd;
For noble souls in nature are ally'd. Dryden.

There are such associations made in the minds of most men; and to this might be attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies observable in them. Locke.

SYMPHO'NIUS. adj. [from symphony.]
Harmonious; agreeing in sound.

Up he rode,
Follow'd with acclamation and the sound
Symphonious of ten thousand harps, that tun'd Angelick harmonies, Milton.

SY'MPHONY. n. f. [symphonie, Fr. σύν and φωνή.] Concert of instruments; harmony of mingled sounds.

A learned searcher from Pythagoras's school, where it was a maxim that the images of all things are latent in numbers, determines the comeliest proportion between breadths and heights, reducing symmetry to symphony, and the harmony of sound to a kind of harmony in sight. Wotton.

Speak, ye who best can tell, ye sons of light,
Angels! for ye behold him, and with songs
And choral symphonies, day without night, Circle his throne rejoicing. Milton.

The trumpets sound,
And warlike symphony is heard around;
The marching troops through Athens take their way;
The great earl marshal orders their array. Dryden.

SY'MPHYSIS. n. f. [σύν and φύσις.]

Symphysis, in its original signification, denotes a connascency, or growing together; and perhaps is meant of those bones which in young children are distinct, but after some years unite and consolidate into one bone. Wifeman.

SYMPO'SIACK. adj. [symposiaque, Fr. συμπόσιος.] Relating to merrymakings; happening where company is drinking together.

By desiring a secrecy to words spoke under the rose, we only mean in society and computation, from the ancient custom of symposiack meetings to wear chaplets of roses about their heads. Brown.

In some of those symposiack disputations amongst my acquaintance, I affirmed that the dietetick part of medicine depended upon scientifick principles. Arbutnot.

SY'MPTOM. n. f. [symptome, French; σύμπτωμα.]

1. Something that happens concurrently with something else, not as the original cause, nor as the necessary or conitant effect.

The symptoms, as Dr. Sydenham remarks, which are commonly scorbutick, are often nothing but the principles or seeds of a growing, but unripe gout. Blackmore.

2. A sign; a token.

Ten glorious campaigns are pass'd, and now, like the sick man, we are expiring with all sorts of good symptoms. Swift.

SYMPTOMA'TICAL. } adj. [symptoma- SYMPTOMA'TICK. } tique, Fr. from symptom.] Happening concurrently or occasionally.

Symptomatical is often used to denote the difference between the primary and secondary causes in diseases; as a fever from pain is said to be symptomatical, because it arises from pain only; and therefore the ordinary means in fevers are not in such cases to be had recourse to, but to what will remove the pain; for, when that ceases, the fever will cease, without any direct means taken for that. Quincy.

By fomentation and a cataplasm the swelling was discuss'd; and the fever, then appearing but symptomatical, lessened as the heat and pain mitigated. Wifeman.

SYMPTOMA'TICALLY. adv. [from symptomatical.] In the nature of a symptom.

The causes of a bubo are vicious humours abounding in the blood, or in the nerves, excreted sometimes critically, sometimes symptomatically. Wifeman.

SYNAGO'GICAL. adj. [from [synagogue.]] Pertaining to a synagogue.

SY'NAGOGUE. n. f. [synagogue, Fr. συναγωγή.] An assembly of the Jews to worship.

Go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue. Shakspeare.

As his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath. Gospel.

SYNALE'PHA. n. f. [συναλοιφή.] A contraction or excision of a syllable in Latin verse, by joining together two vowels in the scanning, or cutting off the ending vowel; as, ill' ego.

Virgil, though smooth, is far from affecting it: he frequently uses synalephas, and concludes his sense in the middle of his verse. Dryden.

SYNARTHRO'SIS. n. f. [σύν and ἄρθρον.] A close conjunction of two bones.

There is a conspicuous motion where the conjunction is called diarthrosis, as in the elbow; an obscure one, where the conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining of the carpus to the metacarpus. Wifeman.

SYNCHONDRO'SIS. n. f. [σύν and χόνδρος.] Synchondrosis is an union by gristles of the sternon to the ribs. Wifeman.

SYNCHRO'NICAL. adj. [σύν and χρόνος.]

Happening together at the same time.

It is difficult to make out how the air is conveyed into the left ventricle of the heart, the systole and diastole of the heart and lungs being far from synchronical. Boyle.

SY'NCHRONISM. n. f. [σύν and χρόνος.] Concurrence of events happening at the same time.

The coherence and synchronism of all the parts of the Mosaiical chronology, after the flood, bear a most regular testimony to the truth of his history. Hale.

SY'NCHRONOUS. adj. [σύν and χρόνος.] Happening at the same time.

The variations of the gravity of the air keep both the solids and fluids in an oscillatory motion, synchronous and proportional to their changes. Arbutnot.

SY'NECOPE. n. f. [syncope, Fr. συνκοπή.]

1. Fainting fit.

The symptoms attending gunshot wounds are pain, fever, delirium, and syncope. Wifeman.

2. Contraction of a word by cutting off a part in the middle.

SY'NCOPEIST. n. f. [from syncope.] Contractor of words.
To outline all the modern syncopeists, and thoroughly content my English readers, I intend to publish a Spektator that shall not have a single vowel in it. Spektator.

To SY'NDICATE. v. n. [syndiquer, Fr. σύν and δική.] To judge; to pass judgment on; to censure. An unusual word. Not in use.

Aristotle undertook to censure and syndicate his master, and all law-makers before him. Hakewill.

SY'NDROME. n. f. [σύνδρομη.] Concurrent action; concurrence.

All things being linked together by an uninterrupted chain of causes, every single motion owns a dependance on such a syndrome of prequired motors. Glanville.

SYNE'CDOCHE. n. f. [synecdoche, Fr. συνεκδοχή.] A figure by which part is taken for the whole, or the whole for part.

Because they are instruments of grace in the hands of God, and by these his holy spirit changes our hearts; therefore the whole work is attributed to them by a synecdoche; that is, they do in this manner the work for which God ordained them. Taylor.

SYNECDO'CHICAL. adj. [from synecdoche.] Expressed by a synecdoche; implying a synecdoche.

Should I, Lindamer, bring you into hospitals, and shew you there how many souls, narrowly lodged in synecdochical bodies, see their earthen cottages moulder away to dust, those miserable persons, by the loss of one limb after another, surviving but part of themselves, and living to see themselves dead and buried by piecemeal? Boyle.

SYNNEURO'SIS. n. f. [σύν and νεύρον.]

Synneurosis is when the connexion is made by a ligament. Of this in symplysis we find instances, in the connexion of the ossa pubis together, especially in women, by a ligamentous substance. In articulation, it is either round, as that which unites the head of the os femoris to the coxa; or broad, as the tendon of the patella, which unites it to the os tibiae. Wifeman.

SY'NOD. n. f. [synode, Fr. σύνδος.]

1. An assembly called for consultation: it is used particularly of ecclesiasticks. A provincial synod is commonly used, and a general council.

The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity. Shakspeare.

Since the mortal and intestine jars
'Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synod been decreed,
T' admit no traffick to our adverse towns. Shakspeare.

The opinion was not only condemned by the synod, but imputed to the emperor as extreme madness. Bacon.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude
Chaos of presbyt'ry, where laymen guide,
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side.

Cleveland.

His royal majesty, according to these presbyterian rules, shall have no power to command his clergy to keep a national synod. White.

Well have ye judg'd, well ended long debate,
Synod of gods! and, like to what ye are,
Great things resolv'd. Milton.

Let us call to synod all the blest
Through heav'n's wide bounds Milton.

The second council of Nice, he saith, I most irreverently call that synod; upon which he falls into a very tragical exclamation, that I should dare to reflect so much dishonour on a council.

Stillingfleet.

Parent of gods and men, propitious Jove!
And you bright synod of the pow'rs above,
On this my son your gracious gifts bestow. Dryden.

2. Conjunction of the heavenly bodies.

Howe'er love's native hours are set,
Whatever starry synod met,
'Tis in the mercy of her eye,
If poor love shall live or die. Crashaw.

Their planetary motions and aspects
Of noxious efficacy, and when to join
In synod unbenign. Milton.

As the planets and stars have, according to astrologers, in their great synods, or conjunctions, much more powerful influences on the air than are ascribed to one or two of them out of that aspect; so divers particulars, which, whilst they lay scattered among the writings of several authors, were inconsiderable, when they come to be laid together, may oftentimes prove highly useful to physiology in their conjunctions. Boyle.

SY'NODAL. n. f. [from synod.] Money paid anciently to the bishop, &c. at Easter visitation.

SY'NODAL. } adj. [synodique, Fr. from SYNO'DICAL. } synod.]
SYNO'DICK. }

1. Relating to synod; transacted in a synod.

The various dignity of their several churches, and of their many functions, rules, and orders in them, by reason of the frequency of their synodical and proceffional meetings, have necessarily raised many questions of place among them. Selden.

St. Athanasius writes a synodical epistle to those of Antioch, to compose the differences among them upon the ordination of Paulinus. Stillingfleet.

2. [synodique, Fr.] Reckoned from one conjunction with the sun to another.

The diurnal and annual revolutions of the sun, to us are the measures of day and year; and the synodick revolution of the moon measures the month. Holder.

The moon makes its synodical motion about the earth in twenty-nine days twelve hours and about forty-four minutes. Locke.

SYNO'DICALLY. adv. [from synodical.] By the authority of a synod or publick assembly.

It shall be needful for those churches synodically to determine something in those points. Saunderson.

The alterations made to the commissioners were brought to the convocation, then sitting, where they were synodically agreed upon. Nelson.

SYNO'NYMA. n. f. [Latin; συνώνυμος.] Names which signify the same thing.

To SYNO'NYMISE. v. a. [from synonyma.] To express the same thing in different words.

This word fortis we may synonymise after all these fashions, stout, hardy, valiant, doughty, courageous, adventurous, brave, bold, daring, intrepid. Camden.

SYNO'NYMOUS. adj. [synonyme, French; συνώνυμος.] Expressing the same thing by different words.

When two or more words signify the same thing, as wave and billow, mead and meadow, they are usually called synonymous words. Watts.

These words consist of two propositions, which are not distinct in sense, but one and the same thing variously expressed; for wisdom and understanding are synonymous words here. Tillotson.

Fortune is but a synonymous word for nature and necessity. Bentley.

SYNO'NYMY. n. f. [συνωνυμία.] The quality of expressing by different words the same thing.

SYNO'PSIS. n. f. [συνopsis.] A general view; all the parts brought under one view.

SYNO'PTICAL. adj. [from synopsis.] Affording a view of many parts at once.

We have collected so many synoptical tables, calculated for his monthly use. Evelyn.

SYNTA'CTICAL. adj. [from syntaxis, Latin.]

1. Conjoined; fitted to each other.
2. Relating to the construction of speech.

SY'NTAX. } n. f. [συνταξις.]
SYNTA'XIS. }

1. A system; a number of things joined together.

They owe no other dependance to the first than what is common to the whole syntax of beings. Glanville.

2. That part of grammar which teaches the construction of words.

I can produce a hundred instances to convince any reasonable man, that they do not so much as understand common grammar and syntax. Swift.

SYNTHE'SIS. n. f. [συνθεσις.] The act of joining: opposed to analysis.

The synthesis consists in assuming the causes discovered and established as principles, and by them explaining the phenomena proceeding from them, and proving the explanations. Newton.

SYNTHE'TICK. adj. [συνθετικός.] Conjoining; compounding; forming composition: opposed to analytick.

Synthetic method is that which begins with the parts, and leads onward to the knowledge of the whole: it begins with the most simple principles and general truths, and proceeds by degrees to that which is drawn from them, or compounded of them; and therefore it is called the method of composition. Watts.

SY'PHON. n. f. [This should be written siphon; σίφων.] A tube; a pipe.

Take your glass, syphon, or crane; and draw it off from its last faces into small bottles. Mortimer.

SY'RINGE. n. f. [σφύριξ.] A pipe through which any liquor is squirted.

The heart seems not designed to be the fountain or conservatory of the vital flame, but as a machine to receive the blood from the veins, and force it out by the arteries through the whole body, as a syringe doth any liquor, though not by the same artifice. Ray.

To SY'RINGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To spout by a syringe.
A flux of blood from the nose, mouth, and eye, was stoppt by the syringing up of oxycrate. Wifeman.

2. To wash with a syringe.

SYRINGO'TOMY. n. f. [σφύριξ and τέτομα.] The act or practice of cutting fistulas or hollow fores.

SYRTIS. n. f. [Latin.] A quicksand; a bog.

A boggy syrtis, neither sea, nor good dry land. Milton.

SY'STEM. n. f. [système, Fr. συστήμα.]

1. Any complexure or combination of many things acting together.
2. A scheme which reduces many things to regular dependence or co-operation.
3. A scheme which unites many things in order.

He presently bought a system of divinity, with design to apply himself straightway to that study. Fell.

Aristotle brings morality into system, by treating of happiness under heads, and ranges it in classes according to its different objects, distinguishing virtues into their several kinds, which had not been handled systematically before. Baker.

The best way to learn any science is to begin with a regular system, or a short and plain scheme of that science well drawn up into a narrow compass. Watts.

SYSTEMA'TICAL. adj. [systematique, Fr. συστηματικός; from system.] Methodical; written or formed with regular subordination of one part to another.

It will be necessary, in a discourse about the formation of the world, to give you a brief account of some of the most principal and systematical phenomena that occur in it. Bentley.

Now we deal much in essays, and unreasonably despise systematical learning; whereas, our fathers had a just value for regularity and systems. Watts.

SYSTEMA'TICALLY. adv. [from systematical.] In form of a system.

I treat of the usefulness of writing books of essay, in comparison of that of writing systematically. Boyle.

Aristotle brings morality into system, and ranges it into classes according to its different objects, distinguishing virtues into their several kinds, which had not been handled systematically before. Baker.

SY'STOLE. n. f. [sytole, Fr. συστολή.]

1. [In anatomy.] The contraction of the heart.

The sytole resembles the forcible bending of a spring, and the diastole its flying out again to its natural size. Ray.

2. [sytole, Fr.] In grammar, the shortening of a long syllable.

T

T A B

T, A mute consonant, which, at the beginning and end of words, has always the same sound, nearly approaching to that of d; but before an i, when followed by a vowel, has the sound of an obscure s: as, nation, salvation; except when / precedes i: as, christian, question.

TA'BBY. n. f. [tabi, tabino, Italian; tabis, Fr.] A kind of waved silk.

Brocades, and tabies, and gauses. Swift.

TA'BBY. adj. Brinded; brindled; varied with different colours.

The act of wasting away.

To TA'BEFY. v. n. [tabefacio, Lat.] To waste; to extenuate.

Meat eaten in greater quantity than is convenient tabefies the body. Harvey.

TA'BERD. n. f. [taberda, low Lat. tabard, Fr.] A long gown; a herald's coat: sometimes written tabard.

TA'BERDER. n. f. [from taberd.] One who wears a long gown.

TA'BERNACLE. n. f. [tabernacle, Fr. tabernaculum, Lat.]

1. A temporary habitation; a casual dwelling.

They sudden rear'd
Celestial tabernacles, where they slept Fann'd with cool winds. Milton.

2. A sacred place; a place of worship.

The greatest conqueror did not only compose his divine odes, but set them to musick: his works, though consecrated to the tabernacle, became the national entertainment, as well as the devotion of his people. Addison.

To TA'BERNACLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To enshrine; to house.

The word was made flesh, and tabernacled amongst us, and we beheld his glory. John.

TABID. adj. [tabide, Fr. tabidus, Lat.] Wasted by disease; consumptive.

The tabid disposition, or the ulcer or ulcers of the lungs, which are the foundation of this disease, is very different from a diminution of the body, and decay of strength from a mere relaxation. Blackmore.

In tabid persons milk is the best restorative, being chyle already prepared. Arbutnot.

TA'BIDNESS. n. f. [from tabid.] Consumptiveness; state of being wasted by disease.

TA'BLATURE. n. f. [from table.] Painting on walls or ceilings.

of their party. Addison.

I am ashamed I cannot make a quicker progress in the French, where every body is so courteous and talkative. Addison.

The coxcomb bird so talkative and grave,
That from his cage cries cuckold, whore, and knave;

Though many a passenger he rightly call,
You hold him no philosopher at all. Pope.

TALKATIVENESS. n. f. [from talkative.]

Loquacity; garrulity; fulness of prate.

We call this talkativeness a feminine vice; but he that shall appropriate loquacity to women, may perhaps sometimes need to light Diogenes's candle to seek a man. Government of the Tongue.

Learned women have lost all credit by their impertinent talkativeness and conceit. Swift.

TALKER. n. f. [from talk.]

From the four hinges of the world, and fell

On the vast wilderness, whose tallest pines,

Though rooted deep as high, and sturdied oaks,

Bow'd their stiff necks. Milton.

They lop, and lop, on this and that hand, cutting away the tall, sound, and substantial timber, that used to shelter them from the winds. Davenant.

May they encrease as fast, and spread their boughs,

As the high fame of their great owner grows!

May he live long enough to see them all

Dark shadows cast, and as his palace tall!

Methinks I see the love that shall be made,

The lovers walking in that am'rous shade.

Waller.

3. Sturdy; lusty.

I'll swear thou art a tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be drunk; but I know thou art no tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt be drunk; but I would thou wouldst be a tall fellow of thy hands. Shakspeare.

Have you not seen a baker's maid
Between two equal panniers sway'd?

Her tallies usefess lie idle,

If plac'd exactly in the middle. Prior.

From his rug the skew'r he takes,

And on the stick ten equal notches makes;

With just resentment flings it on the ground,

There take my tally of ten thousand pound.

Swift.

2. Any thing made to suit another.

So suited in their minds and persons,
That they were fram'd the tallies for each other:

If any alien love had interpos'd,

It must have been an eye-sore to beholders.

Dryden.

To TALLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit; to suit; to cut out, so as to answer any thing.

Nor sister either had, nor brother;

They seem'd just tally'd for each other. Prior.

They are not so well tallied to the present juncture.

Pope.

To TALLY. v. n. To be fitted; to conform; to be suitable.

I found pieces of tiles that exactly tallied with the channel. Addison.

TALMUD. } n. f. The book containing the Jewish traditions, the rabbinical constitutions and explications of the law.

TALNESS. n. f. [from tall.] Height of stature; procerity.

An hideous giant, horrible and high,

That with his talness seem'd to threaten the sky.

Spenser.

The eyes behold so many naked bodies, as for tal- ness of stature could hardly be equalled in any country. Hayward.

TALON. n. f. [talon, Fr.] The claw of a bird of prey.

It may be tried, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer talons. Bacon.

Upward the noble bird directs his wing,

And, tow'ring round his master's earth-born foes,

Swift he collects his fatal stock of ire,

Lifts his fierce talon high, and darts the forked fire.

Prior.

TAMARIND tree. n. f. [tamarindus, Lat.]

The flower of the tamarind-tree consists of several leaves, which are so placed as to resemble a papilionaceous one in some measure; but these expand circularly, from whose many-leaved flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a flat pod, containing many flat angular seeds surrounded with an acid blackish pulp. Miller.

Lenitives are cassia, tamarinds, manna. Wifemen.

Lay me reclin'd

Beneath the spreading tamarind, that shakes,

Fann'd by the breeze, its fever-cooling fruit.

Thomson.

TAMARISK. n. f. [tamarice, Lat.]

The flowers of the tamarisk are rosaceous.

Miller.

Tamarisk is a tree that grows tall, and its wood is medicinal. Mortimer.

TAMBARINE. n. f. [tambourin, Fr.] A tabour; a small drum. It should be tambourin.

Calliope with muses moe,

Soon as thy oaten pipe began to sound,

Their ivory lutes and tambarines forego.

Spenser.

TAME. adj. [tame, Sax. taem, Dutch;

tam, Danish.]

1. Not wild; domestick.

T A M

Thales the Milesian said, That of all wild beasts a tyrant is the worst, and of all tame beasts a flatterer. Addison.

2. Crushed; subdued; depressed; dejected;
spiritless; heartless.

If you should need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue desire it.
Shakspeare.

And now their pride and mettle is asleep,
Their courage with hard labour tame and dull.
Shakspeare.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakspeare.

Praise him, each savage furious beast,
That on his stores do daily feast?
And you, tame slaves of the laborious plough,
Your weary knees to your Creator bow.
Roscommon.

3. Spiritless; unanimated: as, a tame poem. A low phrase.

To TAME. v. n. [gatamgan, Gothick;
tamean, Sax. tammen, Dutch.]

1. To reduce from wildness; to reclaim;
to make gentle.

Those that tame wild horses,
Pace 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle;
But stop their mouths with stubborn bits.
Shakspeare.

2. To subdue; to crush; to depress; to conquer.

If the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame the offences,
Humanity must perforce prey on itself.
Shakspeare.

They cannot tame
Or overcome their riches; not by making Baths, orchards, fish-pools, letting in of seas
Here, and then there forcing them out again.
Ben Jonson.

A puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece.
Shakspeare.

A race unconquer'd, by their clime made bold,
The Caledonians, arm'd with want and cold,
Have been for ages kept for you to tame. Waller.

TA'MEABLE. adj. [from tame.] Suscep-tive of taming.

Ganzas are supposed to be great fowls, of a strong flight, and easily tameable; divers of which may be so brought up as to join together in carrying the weight of a man. Wilkins.

TA'MELY. adv. [from tame.] Not wildly; meanly; spiritlessly.

True obedience, of this madness cur'd,
Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty. Shakspeare.
What courage tamely could to death consent,
And not by striking first the blow prevent?
Dryden.

Once a champion of renown,
So tamely can you bear the ravi'sh'd crown?
Dryden.

Has he given way?
Did he look tamely on, and let them pass?
Addison.

Can you love and reverence your prelate, whom you tamely suffer to be abused?
Swift.

TA'MENESS. n. f. [from tame.]
1. The quality of being tame; not wildness.

2. Want of spirits; timidity.
Such a conduct must appear rather like tameness than beauty, and expose his authority to insults.
Rogers.

TA'MER. n. f. [from tame.] Conqueror;
subduer.

He, great tamer of all human art,
Dulness! whose good old cause I yet defend. Pope.

TA'MINY. n. f. A woollen stuff.
TA'MKIN. n. f. The stopple of the mouth of a great gun.

To TA'MPER. v. a. [of uncertain derivation, derived by Skinner from tempero, Latin.]

VOL. II.

T A N

1. To be busy with physick.

'Tis in vain
To tamper with your crazy brain,
Without trepanning of your skull
As often as the moon's at full. Hudibras.

He tried washes to bring him to a better complexion, but there was no good to be done; the very tampering cast him into a disease. L'Estrange.

2. To meddle; to have to do without fitness or necessity.

That key of knowledge, which should give us entrance into the recesses of religion, is by so much tampering and wrenching made useless. Decay of Piety.

'Tis dangerous tampering with a muse,
The profits small, and you have much to lose:
For though true wit adorns your birth or place,
Degenerate lines degrade the attained race.
Roscommon.

Earl Waltheof being overtaken with wine, engaged in a conspiracy; but, repenting next morning, repaired to the king, and discovered the whole matter: notwithstanding which he was beheaded upon the defeat of the conspiracy, for having but thus far tampered in it. Addison.

3. To deal; to practise secretly.

Others tamper'd
For Fleetwood, Desborough, and Lambert.
Hudibras.

To TAN. v. a. [tannen, Dutch; tanner,
French.]

1. To impregnate or imbue with bark.

A human skull covered with the skin, having been buried in some limy soil, was tanned or turned into a kind of leather. Grew.

Black cattle produce tallow, hides, and beef; but the greatest part of the hides are exported raw for want of bark to tan them. Swift.

They sell us their bark at a good price for tanning our hides into leather. Swift.

2. To imbrown by the sun.

His face all tann'd with scorching sunny ray,
As he had travell'd many a summer's day
Through boiling sands of Araby and Ind. Spenser.

Like sun-parch'd quarters on the city gate,
Such is thy tann'd skin's lamentable state. Donne.

A brown for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tann'd. Cleveland.

TANE for taken, ta'en. Ill spelt.

Two trophies tane from the eastern and western shore,
And both those nations twice triumphed o'er:
May.

TANG. n. f. [tanghe, Dutch, acrid.]

1. A strong taste; a taste left in the mouth.

Sin taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills it also seasons: so that although the body of the liquor should be poured out again, yet still it leaves that tang behind it. South.

It is strange that the soul should never once recal-over any of its pure native thoughts, before it borrowed any thing from the body; never bring into the waking man's view any other ideas but what have a tang of the cask, and derive their original from that union. Locke.

2. Relish; taste. A low word.

There was not the least tang of religion, which is indeed the worst affectation in any thing he said or did. Atterbury.

3. Something that leaves a sting or pain behind it.

She had a tongue with a tang,
Would cry to a sailor, Go hang. Shakspeare.

4. Sound; tone: this is mistaken for tone or twang.

There is a pretty affectation in the Allemain, which gives their speech a different tang from ours.
Holder.

To TANG. v. n. [This is, I think, mistaken for twang.] To ring with.

Be opposite with a kinsman, furly with thy servants; let thy tongue tang arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity. Shakspeare.

TA'NGENT. n. f. [tangent, French; tangens, Latin.]

T A N

Tangent, in trigonometry, is a right line perpendicularly raised on the extremity of a radius, and which touches a circle so as not to cut it; but yet intersects another line without the circle called a secant, that is drawn from the centre, and which cuts the arc to which it is a tangent. Trevoux.

Nothing in this hypothesis can retain the planets in their orbs, but they would immediately desert them and the neighbourhood of the sun, and vanish away in tangents to their several circles into the mundane space. Bentley.

TANGIBILITY. n. f. [from tangible.]
The quality of being perceived by the touch.

TA'NGIBLE. adj. [from tango, Lat.] Perceptible by the touch.

Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the comfort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body. Bacon.

By the touch, the tangible qualities of bodies are discerned, as hard, soft, smooth. Locke.

To TA'NGLE. v. a. [See ENTANGLE.]

1. To implicate; to knit together.

2. To ensnare; to entrap.

She means to tangle mine eyes too.
'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream.
Shakspeare.

I do, quoth he, perceive
My king is tangled in affection to
A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen.
Shakspeare.

You must lay lime to tangle her desires
By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes
Shall be full fraught with serviceable vows.
Shakspeare.

If thou retire, the dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee.
Shakspeare.

Now ly't victorious
Among thy slain self-kill'd,
Not willingly, but tangled in the fold
Of dire necessity. Milton.

Skill'd to retire, and in retiring draw Hearts after them, tangled in amorous nets.
Milton.

With subtle cobweb cheats,
They're catch'd in knotted law-like nets;
In which when once they are entangled,
The more they stir, the more they're tangled.
Hudibras.

3. To embroil; to embarrass.

When my simple weakness strays,
Tangled in forbidden ways,
He, my shepherd, is my guide,
He's before me, on my side. Crashaw.

To TA'NGLE. v. n. To be entangled.

Shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd
All path of man or beast. Anon.

TA'NGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A knot of things interwoven in one another, or different parts of the same thing perplexed.

He leading swiftly rowl'd
In tangles, and made intricate seem straight,
To mischief swift. Milton.

Sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
Or with the tangles of Neera's hair. Milton.

TA'NIST. n. f. [an Irish word; an taanister, Erse.]

Presently after the death of any of their captains, they assemble themselves to chuse another in his stead, and nominate commonly the next brother; and then next to him do they chuse next of the blood to be tanist, who shall next succeed him in the said captainry. Spenser.

TA'NISTRY. n. f. [from tanist.]
The Irish hold their lands by tanistry, which is no more than a personal estate for his life-time that is tanist, by reason he is admitted thereunto by election. Spenser.

If the Irish be not permitted to purchase estates of freeholds, which might descend to their children, must they not continue their custom of tanistry?
which makes all their possessions uncertain. Davies.

T A P

By the Irish custom of tanistry, the chieftains of every country, and the chief of every sept, had no longer estate than for life in their chieftainries; and when their chieftains were dead, their sons, or next heirs, did not succeed them, but their tanists, who were elective, and purchased their elections by strong hand. Davies.

TANK. n. f. [tanque, Fr.] A large cistern or basin.

Handle your pruning knife with dexterity; go rightly to your business: you have cost me much, and must earn it: here's plentiful provision, rascal; fallading in the garden, and water in the tank; and in holy days, the licking of a platter of rice when you deserve it. Dryden.

TANKARD. n. f. [tanquaerd, Fr. tankaerd, Dutch; tancaird, Irish.] A large vessel with a cover, for strong drink.

Hath his tankard touched your brain?

Sure they're fall'n asleep again. Ben Jonson.

Marius was the first who drank out of a silver tankard, after the manner of Bacchus. Arbutnot.

When any calls for ale, fill the largest tankard cup top full. Swift.

TANNER. n. f. [from tan.] One whose trade is to tan leather,

Tanners use that lime which is newly drawn out of the kiln, and not slacked with water or air. Moxon.

TANPIT. n. f. [from tan and pit.] A pit where leather is impregnated with bark.

TANSY. n. f. [tanacetum, Lat.] An odorous plant. Miller.

TANTALISM. n. f. [from tantalize.] A punishment like that of Tantalus.

A lively representation of a person lying under the torments of such a tantalism, or platonick hell. Spektator.

To TANTALIZE. v. a. [from Tantalus, whose punishment was to starve among fruits and water which he could not touch.] To torment by the show of pleasures which cannot be reached.

Thy vain desires, at strife
Within themselves have tantaliz'd thy life. Dryden.

The maid once sped was not suffered to tantalize the male part of the commonwealth. Addison.

TANTAMOUNT. n. f. [Fr.] Equivalent.

If one third of our coin were gone, and men had equally one third less money than they have, it must be tantamount: what I 'scape of one third less, another must make up. Locke.

TANTIVY. adv. [from the note of a hunting horn, so expressed in articulate sounds. From Tantâvi, says Skinner.] To ride tantivy is to ride with great speed.

TANTLING. n. f. [from Tantalus.] One seized with hopes of pleasure unattainable.

Hard life,
To be still hot summer's tantlings, and
The shrinking slaves of winter. Shakspeare.

To TAP. v. a. [tappen, Dutch; tapper, French.]

1. To touch lightly; to strike gently.

2. [tappen, Dutch.] To pierce a vessel; to broach a vessel. It is used likewise of the liquor.

That blood, already like the pelican,
Hast thou tapt out, and drunkenly caroused. Shakspeare.

He has been tapping his liquors, while I have been spilling my blood. Addison.

Wait with patience till the tumour becomes troublesome, and then tap it with a lancet. Sharp.

TAP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A gentle blow.

T A P

This is the right fencing grace, tap for tap, and so part fair. Shakspeare.

Each shakes her fan with a smile, then gives her right hand woman a tap upon the shoulder. Spektator.

As at hot cockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of many a clown,
Buxoma gave a gentle tap. Gay.

So Huron-leeches, when their patient lies
In feverish restlessness with unclos'd eyes,
Apply with gentle strokes their ozier rod,
And tap by tap invite the sleepy god. Harte.

2. A pipe at which the liquor of a vessel is let out.

A gentleman was inclined to the knight of Gascoigne's distemper, upon hearing the noise of a tap running. Derham.

TAPE. n. f. [tæppan, Sax.] A narrow fillet or band of linen.

Will you buy any tape, or lace for your cape,
My dainty duck, my dear-a? Shakspeare.

This pouch that's ty'd with tape
I'll wager that the prize shall be my due. Gay.

On once a flock-bed, but repair'd with straw,
With tape-ty'd curtains never meant to draw. Pope.

TAPER. n. f. [tæpen, Sax.] A wax candle; a light.

Get me a taper in my study, Lucius:
When it is lighted, come and call me. Shakspeare.

My daughter and little son we'll dress
With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,
And rattles in their hands. Shakspeare.

If any snatch the pure taper from my hand, and hold it to the devil, he will only burn his own fingers, but shall not rob me of the reward of my good intention. Taylor.

There the fair light,
Like Hero's taper in the window plac'd,
Such fate from the malignant air did find,
As that expos'd to the boist'rous wind. Waller.

To see this fleet,
Heav'n, as if there wanted lights above,
For tapers made two glaring comets rise. Dryden.

TAPER. adj. [from the form of a taper.] Regularly narrowed from the bottom to the top; pyramidal; conical.

Her taper fingers, and her panting breast,
He praises. Dryden.

From the beaver the otter differs in his teeth,
Which are canine; and in his tail, which is feline,
Or a long taper. Grew.

To TAPER. v. n. To grow gradually smaller.

The back is made tapering in form of a pillar,
The lower vetebræ being the broadest and largest;
The superior lesser and lesser, for the greater stability of the trunk. Ray.

Such be the dog,
With tap-ring tail, that nimbly cuts the wind. Tickel.

TAPESTRY. n. f. [tapestrie, tapisserie, tapis, Fr. tapetum, Lat.] Cloth woven in regular figures.

In the desk
That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapestry,
There is a purse of ducats. Shakspeare.

The casements are with golden tissue spread,
And horses' hoofs, for earth, on filken tap'stry tread. Dryden.

One room is hung with tapestry, in which are wrought the figures of the great persons of the family. Addison.

TAPET. n. f. [tapetia, Lat.] Worked or figured stuff.

To their work they sit, and each doth chuse
What story she will for her tapet take. Spenser.

TAPROOT. n. f. [tap and root.] The principal stem of the root.

Some put under the trees raised of seed, about four inches below the place where they sow their seeds, a small piece of tile to stop the running down of the taproot, which occasions it to branch when it comes to the tile. Mortimer.

TAPSTER. n. f. [from tap.] One whose business is to draw beer in an alehouse.

T A R

The oath of a lover is no stronger than the word of a tapster; they are both the confirmers of false reckonings. Shakspeare.

Though you change your place, you need not change your trade: I'll be your tapster still. Shakspeare.

The world is come now to that pass, that the vintner and tapster may broach what religion they please; and the apothecary may mingle her as he pleases. Howel.

Though the painting grows decay'd,
The house will never lose its trade;
Nay, though the treacherous tapster Thomas Hangs a new angel two doors from us. Swift.

TAR. n. f. [tape, Sax. tarre, Dutch; tiere, Danish.] Liquid pitch; the turpentine of the pine or fir drained out by fire.

Then, foaming tar, their bridles they would champ,
And trampling the fine element would fiercely ramp. Spenser.

A man will not lose a hog for a halfpennyworth of tar. Cumden.

TAR. n. f. [from tar used in ships.] A sailor; a seaman, in contempt.

In senates bold, and fierce in war,
A land commander, and a tar. Swift.

To TAR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smear over with tar.

2. To tease; to provoke. [ταράττω.]

There has been much to do on both sides; and the nation holds it no sin to tarre them on to controversy. Shakspeare.

Two curs shall tame each other; pride alone
Must tar the mastiffs on, as 'twere the bone. Shakspeare.

TARANTULA. n. f. [Italian; tarantula, Fr.] An insect whose bite is only cured by musick.

This word, lover, did no less pierce poor Pyrocles, than the right tune of musick toucheth him that is sick of the tarantula. Sidney.

He that uses the word tarantula, without having any idea of what it stands for, means nothing at all by it. Locke.

TARDA'TION. n. f. [tardo, Lat.] The act of hindering or delaying.

TARDIGRA'DOUS. adj. [tardigradus, Lat.] Moving slowly.

It is but a slow and tardigradous animal, preying upon advantage, and otherwise may be escaped. Brown.

TARDILY. adv. [from tardy.] Slowly; sluggishly.

He was indeed the glass,
Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves;
Speaking thick, which nature made his blemish,
Became the accents of the valiant:
For those that could speak slow and tardily,
Would turn their own perfection to abuse,
To seem like him. Shakspeare.

TARDINESS. n. f. [from tardy.] Slowness; sluggishness; unwillingness to action or motion.

A tardiness in nature,
Which often leaves the history unspoke,
That it intends to do. Shakspeare.

TARDITY. n. f. [tarditas, from tardus, Lat. tardivete, Fr.] Slowness; want of velocity.

Suppose some observable tardity in the motion of light, and then ask how we should arrive to perceive it? Digby.

Our explication includes time in the notions of velocity and tardity. Digby.

TARDY. adj. [tardus, Lat. tardif, Fr.]

1. Slow; not swift.

Nor should their age by years be told,
Whose souls more swift than motion climb,
And check the tardy flight of time. Sandys.

2. Sluggish; unwilling to action or motion.

T A R

Behold that navy which a while before
Provok'd the tardy English close to fight,
Now draw their beaten vessels close to shore,
As larks lie dar'd to shun the hobbies flight.

Dryden.

When certain to o'ercome, inclin'd to save,
Tardy to vengeance, and with mercy brave.

Prior.

3. Dilatory; late; tedious.

You shall have letters from me to my son
In your behalf, to meet you on the way;
Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay.

Shakspeare.

Death he as oft accus'd
Of tardy execution, since denounc'd
The day of his offence.

Milton.

The tardy plants in our cold orchards plac'd,
Reserve their fruit for the next age's taste:
There a small grain in some few months will be
A firm, a lofty, and a spacious tree.

Waller.

Tardy of aid, unseal thy heavy eyes,
Awake, and with the dawning day arise.
You may freely censure him for being tardy in his payments.

Arbutnot.

4. Unwary. A low word.

Yield, scoundrel base, quoth she, or die,
Thy life is mine, and liberty:
But if thou think'st I took thee tardy,
And dar'st presume to be so hardy
To try thy fortune o'er a-fresh,
I'll wave my title to thy flesh.

Hudibras.

5. Criminal; offending. A low word.

If they take them tardy, they endeavour to humble them by way of reprisal: those slips and misma-nagements are usually ridiculed.

Collier.

To TA'RDY. v. a. [tarder, Fr. from the adjective.] To delay; to hinder.
I chose

Camillo for the minister, to poison
My friend Polixenes; which had been done,
But that the good mind of Camillo tardied
My swift command.

Shakspeare.

TARE. n. f. [from teeren, Dutch, to consume. Skinner.] A weed that grows among corn.

Through hatred of tares, the corn in the field of God is plucked up.

Hooker.

The liberal contributions such teachers met with,
served to invite more labourers, where their seedtime was their harvest; and by sowing tares they reaped gold.

Decay of Piety.

My country neighbours begin not to think of being in general, which is being abstracted from all its inferior species, before they come to think of the fly in their sheep, or the tares in their corn.

Locke.

TARE. n. f. [Fr.] A mercantile word denoting the weight of any thing containing a commodity; also the allowance made for it.

TARE. The preterit of tear.

The women beat their breasts, their cheeks they tare.

Dryden.

TARGE. } n. f. [tarja, Sax. targe, Ital.
TA'RGET. } targe, Fr. tarian, Welch, which seems the original of the rest; an taargett, Erse.] A kind of buckler or shield born on the left arm. It seems to be commonly used for a defensive weapon, less in circumference than a shield.

Glancing on his helmet made a large
And open gash therein, were not his targe
That broke the violence.

Spenser.

I took all their seven points in my targe.

Shakspeare.

Henceforward will I bear
Upon my targe three fair shining suns.

Shakspeare.

The arms she useth most is the targe, to shroud herself under, and fence away the blow.

Howel.

Those leaves
They gather'd, broad as Amazonian targe.

Milton.

The Greeks the gates approach'd, their targets
cast

Over their heads, some scaling-ladders plac'd Against the walls.

Derham.

T A R

TARGETIER. n. f. [from target.] One armed with a target.

For horsemen and for targetiers none could with him compare.

Chapman.

TA'RGUM. n. f. [תרגום] A paraphrase on the pentateuch in the Chaldee language.

TA'RIF. n. f. [perhaps a Spanish word;
tarif, Fr.] A cartel of commerce.

This branch of our trade was regulated by a tariff, or declaration of the duties of import and export.

Addison.

TARN. n. f. [tiorn, Islandick.] A bog;
a fen; a marsh; a pool; a quagmire.

To TA'RNISH. v. a. [ternir, Fr.] To fully; to soil; to make not bright.

Let him pray for resolution, that he may discover nothing that may discredit the cause, tarnish the glory, and weaken the example of the suffering.

Collier.

Low waves the rooted forest, vex'd, and sheds
What of its tarnish'd honours yet remain.

Thomson.

To TA'RNISH. v. n. To lose brightness.

If a fine object should tarnish by having a great many see it, or the musick should run mostly into one man's ears, these satisfactions would be made inclosure.

Collier.

TARPA'WLING. n. f. [from tar.]

1. Hempen cloth smeared with tar.

Some the gall'd ropes with dauby marling bind,
Or searcloth masts with strong tarpa'wling coats.

Dryden.

2. A sailor, in contempt.

Was any thing wanting to the extravagance of this age, but the making a living tarpa'wlin and a swabber the hero of a tragedy?

Dennis.

TA'RRAGON. n. f. A plant called herb dragon.

TA'RRANCE. n. f. [from tarry.] Stay;
delay; perhaps sojourn.

Dispatch me hence;

Come, answer not; but do it presently,
I am impatient of my tarriance.

Shakspeare.

TA'RRIER. n. f.

TAUTOLOGY. n. f. [ταυτολογία; ταῦτο and λόγος; tautologie, Fr.] Repetition of the same words, or of the same sense in different words.
All science is not tautology; the last ages have shewn us, what antiquity never saw, in a dream.
Glanville.
Saint Andre's feet ne'er kept more equal time,
Not ev'n the feet of thy own Psyche's rhyme;
Though they in numbers as in sense excel,
So just, so like tautology, they fell. Dryden.
Every paper addressed to our beautiful incendiaries hath been filled with different considerations, that enemies may not accuse me of tautology. Addison.
To TAW. v. a. [touwen, Dut. tapien,

Above your own Numidia's tawny sons? Addison.
TAX. n. f. [tāsg, Welsh; taxe, Fr. taxe,
Dutch.]
1. An impost; a tribute imposed; an excise; a tallage.
He, says Horace, being the son of a tax gatherer or collector, smells every where of the meanness of his birth. Dryden.
With wars and taxes others waste their own,
And houses burn, and household gods deface,
To drink in bowls which glittering gems enchase.
Dryden.
The tax upon tillage was two shillings in the pound in arable land, and four in plantations: this tax was often levied in kind upon corn, and called decumæ or tithes. Arbutnot.
2. [taxo, Lat.] Charge; censure.
He could not without grief of heart, and without some tax upon himself and his ministers for the not executing the laws, look upon the bold licence of some pamphlets. Clarendon.
To TAX. v. a. [taxer, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To load with imposts.

but he taxed the land to give the money. 2 Kings.
2. [taxo, Lat.] To charge; to censure; to accuse. It has of or with, and sometimes for, before the fault imputed, and is used both of persons and things.
How many hath he killed? I promised to eat all of his killing.—Niece, you tax signior Benedick too much; but he'll be meet with you. Shakspeare.
I am not juttly to be taxed with any presumption for meddling with matters wherein I have no dealing. Raleigh.
Tax not divine disposal: wisest men
Have err'd, and by bad women been deceiv'd.
Milton.
They cannot tax others omissions towards them without a tacit reproach of their own.
Decay of Piety.
He taxed not Homer nor Virgil for interesting their gods in the wars of Troy and Italy; neither would he have taxed Milton for his choice of a supernatural argument. Dryden.
Men's virtues I have commended as freely as I have taxed their crimes. Dryden.
He call'd him back aloud, and tax'd his fear;
And sure enough he heard, but durst not hear.
Dryden.
Like some rich and mighty murderer,
Too great for prison, which he breaks with gold,

Who fresher for new mischief does appear,
And dares the world to tax him with the old.

Dryden.

If this be chance, it is extraordinary; and I dare not call it more, for fear of being taxed with superstition.

Dryden.

If he taxes both of long delay,

My guilt is less, who sooner came away.

Dryden.

This salutation cannot be taxed with flattery, since it was directed to a prince, of whom it had been happy for Rome if he had never been born, or if he had never died.

Addison.

TAXABLE. adj. [from tax.] That may be taxed.

TAXATION. n. s. [taxation, Fr. taxatio,
Lat. from tax.]

1. The act of loading with taxes; impost; tax.

The subjects could taste no sweeter fruits of having a king, than grievous taxations to some vain purposes; laws made rather to find faults than to prevent faults.

Sidney.

I bring no overture of war, no taxation of homage;
my words are as full of peace as matter.

Shakespeare.

He daily such taxations did exact,

As were against the order of the state.

Daniel.

Various news I heard,
Of old mismanagements, taxations new;

All neither wholly false nor wholly true.

Pope.

2. Accusation; scandal.

My father's love is enough to honour; speak no more of him, you'll be whipt for taxation one of these days.

Shakespeare.

TAXER. n. s. [from tax.] He who taxes.

These rumours begot scandal against the king, taxing him for a great taxer of his people.

Bacon.

TEA. n. s. [a word, I suppose, Chinese;
thé, Fr.] A Chinese plant, of which the infusion has lately been much drunk in Europe.

The muses' friend, tea, does our fancy aid,
Represses those vapours which the head invade.

Waller.

One has a design of keeping an open tea table.

Addison.

I have filled a tea pot, and received a dish of it.

Addison.

He swept down a dozen tea dishes.

Spectator.

Nor will you encourage the common tea table talk.

Spectator.

Green leaves of tea contain a narcotick juice, which exudes by roasting: this is performed with great care before it is exposed to sale.

Arbutnot.

A living tea pot stands; one arm held out,
One bent; the handle this, and that the spout.

Pope.

The mistress of the tea shop may give half an ounce.

Swift.

The fear of being thought pedants hath taken many young divines off from their severer studies, which they have exchanged for plays, in order to qualify them for tea tables.

Swift.

When you sweep, never stay to pick up tea spoons.

Swift.

TO TEACH. v. a. pret. and part. pass.
taught. sometimes tached, which is now obsolete. [æcan, Sax.]

1. To instruct; to inform, as a master: correlative to learn.

I am too sudden bold:

To teach a teacher ill becometh me.

In vain they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

Matthew.

Teach us by what means to shun
Th' inclement seasons.

Milton.

3. To show; to exhibit so as to impress upon the mind.

He is a good divine that follows his own instructions; I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than to be one of the twenty to follow my own teaching.

Shakespeare.

If some men teach wicked things, it must be that others should practise them.

South.

4. To tell; to give intelligence.

Huswives are tached, instead of a clocke,
How winter night passeth by crowing of cocke.

Tusser.

TO TEACH. v. n. To perform the office of an instructor.

I have labour'd,

And with no little study, that my teaching,

And the strong course of my authority,

Might go one way.

Shakespeare.

The heads judge for reward, the priests teach for hire, and the prophets divine for money.

Micab.

TEACHABLE. adj. [from teach.] Docile; susceptible of instruction.

'Tis sufficient that matters of faith and religion be propounded in such a way, as to render them highly credible, so as an honest and teachable man may willingly and safely assent to them, and according to the rules of prudence be justified in so doing.

Wilkins.

We ought to bring our minds free, unbiassed, and teachable, to learn our religion from the word of God.

Watts.

TEACHABLENESS. n. s. [from teachable.]
Docility; willingness to learn; capacity to learn.

TEACHER. n. s. [from teach.]

1. One who teaches; an instructor; a preceptor.

Nature is no sufficient teacher what we should do that may attain unto life everlasting.

Hooker.

I went into the temple, there to hear
The teachers of our law, and to propose

What might improve my knowledge or their own.

Milton.

These were notions born with us; such as we were taught without the help of a teacher.

South.

Imperious, with a teacher's air,
Boastful he claims a right to wisdom's chair.

Blackm.

2. One who without regular ordination assumes the ministry.

Dissenting teachers are under no incapacity of accepting civil and military employment.

Swift.

3. A preacher; one who is to deliver doctrine to the people.

For the choice of a governor more sufficient, the teachers in all the churches assembled themselves.

Raleigh.

Our lecture men, and some others, whom precise people stile powerful teachers, do seldom honour it.

White.

Wolves shall succeed for teachers.

Milton.

He may teach his diocese who ceases to be able to preach to it; he may do it by appointing teachers, and by a vigilant exacting from them the instruction of their flocks.

South.

TEAD, or TEDE. n. s. [tada, Latin.] A torch; a flambeau. Not in use.

A bushy tead, a groom did light,

And sacred lamp in secret chamber hide.

themselves; amongst the first sort we reckon the dip-chick, coots, teal, wigeon.

Carew.

TEAM. n. s. [temo, the team of a carriage,
Lat. tyme, Sax. a yoke.]

1. A number of horses or oxen drawing at once the same carriage.

Ther a ploughman, all unweeting found,
As he his toilsome team that way did guide,

And brought thee up in ploughman's state to bide.

Spenser.

We fairies that do run

By the triple Hecate's team,

From the presence of the sun,

Following darkness like a dream,

Now are frolick.

Shakespeare.

Making such diff'rence betwixt wake and sleep,

As is the diff'rence betwixt day and night,

The hour before the heav'nly harness'd team

Begins his golden progress in the east.

Shakespeare.

I am in love; but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me, nor who 'tis I love.

Shakespeare.

After the declining sun
Had chang'd the shadows, and their task was done,

Home with their weary team they took their way.

Roscommon.

He heav'd with more than human force to move
A weighty stone, the labour of a team.

Dryden.

In stiff clays they may plow one acre of wheat with a team of horse.

Mortimer.

2. Any number passing in a line.

Like a long team of snowy swans on high,

Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid sky.

Dryden.

TEAR. n. s. [ea in this word is pronounced ee; teap, Saxon; taare, Danish: tear rhymes to cheer.]

1. The water which violent passion forces from the eyes.

She comes; and I'll prepare
My tear-stain'd eyes to see her miseries.

Shakespeare.

The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me, Knowing that thou wouldst have me drown'd on shore

With tears as salt as sea, through thy unkindness.

Shakespeare.

Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear
In all my miseries; but thou hast forced me.

Let's dry our eyes.

Shakespeare.

Tears are the effects of compression of the moisture of the brain upon dilatation of the spirits.

Bacon.

She silently a gentle tear let fall.

Milton.

2. Any moisture trickling in drops.

Let Araby extol her happy coast,

Her fragrant flow'rs, her trees with precious tears,

Her second harvests.

Dryden.

TO TEAR. v. a. pret. tore, anciently tare;
part. pass. *tor*n. [ætan, Saxon; tara, Swedish: ea is pronounced as a; tear rhymes to square.]

1. To pull in pieces; to lacerate; to rend; to separate by violent pulling.

Come, feeling night!

And with thy bloody and invisible hand

Cancel and tear to pieces that great bond

Which keeps me pale.

Shakespeare.

The one went out from me; and I said, Surely he is torn in pieces, and I saw him not since.

Genesis.

John tore off lord Strutt's servants clothes: now and then they came home naked.

Arbutnot.

Ambassadors sent to Carthage were like to be torn to pieces by the populace.

Arbutnot.

2. To laniate; to wound with any sharp point drawn along.

Old men with dust deform'd their hoary hair,
The women beat their breasts, their cheeks they
tare.

Shakespeare.

Neither shall men tear themselves for them in mourning, to comfort them for the dead.

Jeremiah.

3. To break, or take away by violence.

As storms the skies, and torrents tear the ground,
Thus rag'd the prince, and scatter'd death around.

Dryden.

4. To divide violently; to shatter.

Is it not as much reason to say, that God destroys fatherly authority, when he suffers one in possession of it to have his government *tor*n in pieces, and shared by his subjects?

Locke.

5. To pull with violence; to drive violently.

He roar'd, he beat his breast, he tore his hair.

Dryden.

From harden'd oak, or from a rock's cold womb,
At least thou art from some fierce tygers come;

TEA

Or on rough seas from their foundation torn Got by the winds, and in a tempest born. Dryden.
Blush rather, that you are a slave to passion,
Which, like a whirlwind, tears up all your virtues,
And gives you not the leisure to consider. A. Philips.

6. To take away by sudden violence.

Solyman
Rhodes and Buda from the christians tore. Waller.

The hand of fate
Has torn thee from me, and I must forget thee. Addison.

7. To make a violent rent.

In the midst a tearing groan did break
The name of Antony. Shakspeare.

To TEAR. v. n. [tieren, Dutch.] To fume; to rave; to rant turbulently.

All men transported into outrages for small trivial matters, fall under the inuendo of this bull, that ran tearing mad for the pinching of a mouse. L'Estrange.

TEAR. n. s. [from the verb.] A rent; a fissure.

TEARER. n. s. [from to tear.] He who rends or tears; one who blusters.

TEARFALLING. adj. [tear and fall.] Tender; shedding tears.

I am in
So far in blood, that sin will pluck on sin:
Tearfalling pity dwells not in this eye. Shakspeare.

TEARFUL. adj. [tear and full.] Weeping; full of tears.

Is't meet that he Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad,
With tearful eyes add water to the sea? Shakspeare.

This clears the cloudy front of wrinkled care,
And dries the tearful sluices of despair:
Charm'd with that virtuous draught, th' exalted mind

All sense of woe delivers to the wind. Pope.

To TEASE. v. a. [tejan, Sax.]

1. To comb or unravel wool or flax.

2. To scratch cloth in order to level the nap.

3. To torment with importunity; to vex with assiduous impertinence.

No the force of carnal reason,
But in able teasing. Butler.

My friend always teases me about him, because he has no estate. Spektator.

After having been present in public debates, he was teased by his mother to inform her of what had passed. Addison.

We system-makers can sustain
The thesis, which you grant was plain;
And with remarks and comments tease ye,
In case the thing before was easy. Prior.

TEASEL. n. s. [tearl, Sax. dipsacus, Lat.] A plant.

The species are three: one is called cardus ful-lonum, and is of singular use in raising the nap upon woollen cloth. Miller.

TEASER. n. s. [from tease.] Any thing that torments by incessant importunity.

A fly buzzing at his ear, makes him deaf on the best advice. If you would have him come to himself, you must take off his little teaser, which holds his reason at bay. Collier.

TEAT. n. s. [teth, Welsh; tit, Saxon; tette, Dutch; teton, French.] The dug of a beast; anciently the pap of a woman.

Even at thy teat thou hadst thy tyranny. Shakspeare.
Snows cause a fruitful year, watering the earth better than rain; for the earth sucks it as out of the teat. Bacon.

When we perceive that bats have teats, we infer, that they suckle their younglings with milk. Brown.

It more pleas'd my sense,
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe or goat dropping with milk at even. Milton.

TED

Infants sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat. Locke.

The goat, how bright amidst her fellow stars,
Kind Amalthea, reach'd her teat distant
With milk, thy early food. Prior.

TE'CHILY. adv. [from techy.] Peevishly; fretfully; frowardly.

TE'CHINESS. n. s. [from techy.] Peevishness; fretfulness.

TE'CHNICAL. adj. [τεχνικός; technique, Fr.] Belonging to arts; not in common or popular use.

In technical words, or terms of art, they refrain not from calling the same substance sometimes the sulphur, and sometimes the mercury, of a body. Locke.

TE'CHY. adj. Peevish; fretful; irritable; easily made angry; froward.

I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar,
And he is as techy to be woo'd to wooe,
As she is stubborn-chaste against all sute. Shakspeare.

When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple, and felt it bitter, pretty fool, to see it techy, and fall out with the dug! Shakspeare.

TECTO'NICK. adj. [τεκτονικός.] Pertaining to building. Bailey.

To TED. v. a. [teadan, Saxon, to prepare.] To lay grafs newly mown in rows.

The smell of grain, or tedded grafs, or kine,
Or dairy, each rural sight, each rural sound. Milton.

Hay-makers following the mowers, and casting it abroad, they call tedding. Mortimer.

Prudent his fall'n heaps Collecting, cherish'd with the tepid wreaths
Of tedded grafs, and the sun's mellowing beams, Rivall'd with artful heats. Philips.

TE'DDER, or TET'HER. n. s. [tudder, Dut.
tindt, a rope, Islandick.]

1. A rope with which a horse is tied in the field that he may not pasture too wide.

Teigher, Erse.

2. Any thing by which one is restrained.

We lived joyfully, going abroad within our tedder. Bacon.

We shall have them against the wall; we know the length of their tedder; they cannot run far from us. Child.

TE DE'UM. n. s. A hymn of the church, so called from the first two words of the Latin.

The choir,
With all the choicest musick of the kingdom,
Together sung te Deum. Shakspeare.

Te Deum was sung at Saint Paul's after the victory. Bacon.

TE'DIOUS. adj. [tedieux, French; tædium,
Latin.]

1. Wearisome by continuance; troublesome; irksome.

The one intense, the other still remiss,
Cannot well suit with either, but soon prove Tedious alike. Milton.

Pity only on fresh objects stays,
But with the tedious sight of woes decays. Dryden.

2. Wearisome by prolixity. Used of authors or performances.

They unto whom we shall seem tedious are in nowise injured by us, because it is in their own hands to spare that labour which they are not willing to endure. Hooker.

That I be not further tedious unto thee, hear us of thy clemency a few words. Acts.

Chief mastery to dissect
With long and tedious havock fabled knights. Milton.

3. Slow.

But then the road was smooth and fair to see,
With such insensible declivity,
That what men thought a tedious course to run,
Was finish'd in the hour it first begun. Harte.

TE'DIOUSLY. adv. [from tedious.] In such a manner as to weary.

TEE

TE'DIOUSNESS. n. s. [from tedious.]

1. Wearisomeness by continuance.

She distastes them all within a while;
And in the sweetest finds a tediousness. Davies.

2. Wearisomeness by prolixity.

In vain we labour to persuade them, that any thing can take away the tediousness of prayer, except it be brought to the same measure and form which themselves assign. Hooker.

3. Prolixity; length.

Since brevity's the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief. Shakspeare.

4. Uneasiness; tiresomeness; quality of wearying.

In those very actions whereby we are especially perfected in this life, we are not able to persist; forced we are with very weariness, and that often,
to interrupt them; which tediousness cannot fall into those operations that are in the state of bliss when our union with God is complete. Hooker.

More than kisses, letters mingle souls,
For thus friends absent speak: this ease controuls
The tediousness of my life. Donne.

To TEEM. v. n. [team, Saxon, offspring.]

1. To bring young.

If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live
And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her. Shakspeare.

2. To be pregnant; to engender young.

Have we more sons? or are we like to have?
Is not my teeming date drunk up with time,
And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age? Shakspeare.

When the rising spring adorns the mead,
Teeming buds and cheerful greens appear. Dryden.

There are fundamental truths, the basis upon which a great many others rest: these are teeming truths, rich in store, with which they furnish the mind, and, like the lights of heaven, give light and evidence to other things. Locke.

3. To be full; to be charged as a breeding animal.

We live in a nation where there is scarce a single head that does not teem with politicks. Addison.

To TEEM. v. a.

1. To bring forth; to produce.

What's the newest grief?
Each minute teems a new one. Shakspeare.

Common mother, thou Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast, Teems and feeds all. Shakspeare.

The earth obey'd; and strait
Op'ning her fertile womb, teem'd at a birth Innumerable living creatures. Milton.

The deluge wrought such a change, that the earth did not then teem forth its increase, as formerly, of its own accord, but required culture. Woodward.

2. To pour. A low word, imagined by Skinner to come from tommen, Danish, to draw out; to pour. The Scots retain it: as, teem that water out; hence Swift took this word.

Teem out the remainder of the ale into the tankard, and fill the glass with small beer. Swift.

TE'EMER. n. s. [from teem.] One that brings young.

TEE'MFUL. adj. [teampul, Saxon.]

1. Pregnant; prolific.

2. Brimful. Ainsworth.

TE'EMLESS. adj. [from teem.] Unfruitful; not prolific.

Such wars, such waste, such fiery tracks of dearth,
Their zeal has left, and such a teemless earth. Dryden.

TEEN. n. s. [tinan, Saxon, to kindle; tenen, Flemish, to vex; teonan, Saxon, injuries.] Sorrow; grief. Not in use.

Arrived there,
That barehead knight for dread and doleful teen
Would fain have fled, ne durst approached near. Spenser.

Fry not in heartless grief and doleful teen. Spenser.

TEL

My heart bleeds
To think o' th' teene that I have turn'd you to.
Shakspeare.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.
Shakspeare.

To TEEN. v. a. [from tinan, to kindle, Saxon.] To excite; to provoke to do a thing. Not in use.

TEENS. n. s. [from teen for ten.] The years reckoned by the termination teen; as, thirteen, fourteen. Spenser.

Our author would excuse these youthful scenes,
Begotten at his entrance in his teens;
Some childish fancies may approve the toy,
Some like the muse the more for being a boy.
Granville.

TEETH. The plural of tooth.

Who can open the doors of his face? his teeth are terrible round about. Job.

To TEETH. v. n. [from the noun.] To breed teeth; to be at the time of dentition.

When the symptoms of teething appear, the gums ought to be relaxed by softening ointment. Arbut.

TE'GUMENT. n. s. [tegumentum, Latin.] Cover; the outward part. This word is seldom used but in anatomy or physics.

Clip and trim those tender strings in the fashion of beard, or other hairy teguments. Brown.
Proceed by section, dividing the skin, and separating the teguments. Wiseman.

In the nutmeg another tegument is the mace between the green pericarpium and the hard shell. Ray.

To TEH-HE. v. n. [A cant word made from the sound.] To laugh with a loud and more insolent kind of cachinnation; to titter.

They laugh'd and teh-he'd with derision,
To see them take your deposition. Hudibras.

TEID tree. n. s. [tilia, Latin.] The same with linden or lime tree.

A teitree and an oak have their substance in them when they cast their leaves. Isaiab.

TEINT. n. s. [teinte, French.] Colour; touch of the pencil.

Glazed colours have a vivacity which can never be imitated by the most brilliant colours, because the different teints are simply laid on, each in its place, one after another. Dryden.

TE'LARY. adj. [tela, a web, Latin.] Spinning webs.

The pictures of telary spiders, and their position in the web, is commonly made lateral, and regarding the horizon; although we shall commonly find it downward, and their heads respecting the center. Brown.

TE'LESCOPE. n. s. [telescope, Fr. télescope and σκοπεῖν.] A long glass by which distant objects are viewed.

The telescope discovers to us distant wonders in the heavens, and shews the milky way, and the bright cloudy spots, in a very dark sky, to be a collection of little stars. Watts.

TELESCO'PICAL. adj. [from telescope.] Belonging to a telescope; seeing at a distance.

To TELL. v. a. pret. and part. pass. told. [tellan, Saxon; taelen, tellen, Dutch; talen, Danish.]

1. To utter; to express; to speak.
I will not eat till I have told mine errand. Genesis.

Thy message might in telling wound,
And in performing end us. Milton.

2. To relate; to rehearse.
I will declare what wise men have told from their fathers, and have not hid. Job.

When Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and the interpretation, he worshipped. Judges.

He longer will delay to hear thee tell
His generation. Milton.

You must know; but break, O break my heart,
Before I tell my fatal story out,
Th' usurper of my throne is my wife! Dryden.
The rest are vanish'd, none repays the gate,
And not a man appears to tell their fate. Pope.

3. To teach; to inform.
He gently ask'd, where all the people be,
Which in that stately building wont to dwell?
Who answer'd him full soft, he could not tell. Spenser.

I told him of myself; which was as much
As to have ask'd him pardon. Shakspeare.

Tell me now, what lady is the same,
To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
That you to-day promis'd to tell me of? Shakspeare.
The fourth part of a shekel of silver will I give to the man of God to tell us our way. 1 Samuel.
Saint Paul telleth us, we must needs be subject not only for fear, but also for conscience sake. Bishop Sanderfon.

Tell me how may I know him, how adore.
Milton.

4. To discover; to betray.
They will tell it to the inhabitants. Numbers.

5. To count; to number.
Here lies the learned Savile's heir,
So early wise, and lasting fair,
That none, except her years they told,
Thought her a child, or thought her old. Waller.
Numerous sails the fearful only tell;
Courage from hearts, and not from numbers, grows. Dryden.

A child can tell twenty before he has any idea of infinite.
She doubts if two and two make four,
Though she has told them ten times o'er. Prior.

6. To make excuses. A low word.
Tush, never tell me; I take it much unkindly,
That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse
As if the strings were thine, shouldst know of this. Shakspeare.

To TELL. v. n.

1. To give an account; to make report.
I will compass thine altar, O Lord, that I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works. Psalms.
Ye that live and move, fair creatures! tell,
Tell, if ye saw, how came I thus, how here? Milton.

2. To TELL on. To inform of. A doubtful phrase.

David saved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, saying, Lest they should tell on us, saying, So did David. 1 Samuel.

TE'LLER. n. s. [from tell.]

1. One who tells or relates.
2. One who numbers; a numberer.
3. A teller is an officer of the exchequer, of which there are four in number: their business is to receive all monies due to the king, and give the clerk of the pell a bill to charge him therewith; they also pay all persons any money payable to them by the king, by warrant from the auditor of the receipt: they also make books of receipts and payments, which they deliver to the lord treasurer. Cowell.

TE'LLTALE. n. s. [tell and tale.] One who gives malicious information; one who carries officious intelligence.

You speak to Casca, and to such a man
That is no fearing telltale. Shakspeare.
What, shall these papers lie like telltales here? Shakspeare.

Let not the heavens hear these telltale women Rail on the Lord's anointed.
'Tis done: report displays her telltale wings,
And to each ear the news and tidings brings. Fairfax.

And to the telltale son descry
Our conceal'd solemnity. Milton.

TEM

Eurydice and he are prisoners here,
But will not long be so: this telltale ghost
Perhaps will clear them both. Dryden and Lee.
A telltale out of school
Is of all wits the greatest fool. Swift.
TEMERA'RIOUS. adj. [temeraire, French; temerarius, Latin.]

1. Rash; heady; unreasonably adventurous; unreasonably contemptuous of danger.

Resolution without foresight is but a temerarious folly; and the consequences of things are the first point to be taken into consideration. L'Estrange.

2. Careless; heedless; done at random.
Should he find upon one single sheet of parchment an oration written full of profound sense, adorned with elegant phrase, the wit of man could not persuade him that this was done by the temerarious dashes of an unguided pen. Ray.

TEME'RITY. n. s. [temeritas, Latin.]
Rashness; unreasonable contempt of danger.

The figures are bold even to temerity. Cowley.
To TE'MPER. v. a. [tempero, Latin; temperer, French.]

1. To mix so as that one part qualifies the other.

I shall temper so Justice with mercy, as may illustrate most Them fully satisfied, and Thee appease. Milton.

2. To compound; to form by mixture; to qualify as an ingredient.
If you could find out but a man
To bear a poison, I would temper it;
That Romeo should upon receipt thereof
Soon sleep in quiet. Shakspeare.

3. To mingle.
Prepare the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of an hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour. Ezekiel.

The good old knight, with a mixture of the father and master of the family, tempered the inquiries after his own affairs with kind questions relating to themselves. Addison.

4. To beat together to a proper consistence.

Th' uncivil kerns of Ireland are in arms,
And temper clay with blood of Englishmen. Shakspeare.

The potter, tempering soft earth, fashioneth every vessel with much labour. Wisdom.

5. To accommodate; to modify.
Thy sustenance serving to the appetite of the eater, tempered itself to every man's liking. Wisdom.

6. To bring to due proportion; to moderate excess.

These soft fires with kindly heat
Of various influence foment and warm, Temper or nourish. Milton.

7. To soften; to mollify; to assuage; to soothe; to calm.

Solon, in his laws to the Athenians, laboured to temper their warlike courage with sweet delights of learning and sciences; so that as much as the one excelled in arms, the other exceeded in knowledge. Spenser.

With this she wons to temper angry Jove,
When all the Gods he threatens with thund'ring dart. Spenser.

Now will I to that old Andronicus,
And temper him with all the art I have. Shakspeare.
Woman! Nature made thee
To temper man: we had been brutes without you. Orway.

8. To form metals to a proper degree of hardness.

The sword
Of Michael from the armoury of God
Was given him temper'd so, that neither keen Nor solid might resist that edge. Milton.
In the tempering of steel, by holding it but a minute or two longer or lesser in the other competent heat, gives it very different tempers as to brittleness or toughness. Boyle.

TEM

Repeated peals they hear,
And, in a heav'n serene, refulgent arms appear:
Redd'ning the skies, and glitt'ring all around,
The temper'd metals clash, and yield a silver sound. Dryden.

9. To govern. A latinism.

With which the damned ghosts he governeth,
And furies rules, and Tartare tempereth. Spenser.
TE'MPER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Due mixture of contrary qualities.

Nothing better proveth the excellency of this soil and temper, than the abundant growing of the palm trees. Raleigh.

Health itself is but a kind of temper, gotten and preserved by a convenient mixture of contraries. Arbutnot.

2. Middle course; mean or medium.

If the estates of some bishops were exorbitant before the reformation, the present clergy's wilhes reach no further than that some reasonable temper had been used instead of paring them so quick. Swift.

3. Constitution of body.

This body would be increased daily, being supplied from above and below; and having done growing, it would become more dry by degrees, and of a temper of greater consistency and firmness. Burnet.

4. Disposition of mind.

This, I shall call it evangelical, temper is far from being natural to any corrupt child of Adam. Hammond.

Remember with what mild
And gracious temper he both heard and judg'd,
Without wrath or reviling. Milton.

This will keep their thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations. Locke.

All irregular tempers in trade and business are but like irregular tempers in eating and drinking. Lavo.

5. Constitutional frame of mind.

The brain may devise laws for the blood, but a hot temper leaps o'er a cold decree. Shakspeare.

Our hearts,
Of brothers temper, do receive you in
With all kind love. Shakspeare.

6. Calmness of mind; moderation.

Restore yourselves unto your tempers, fathers,
And without perturbation here me speak. Ben Jonson.

Teach me, like thee, in various nature wile,
To fall with dignity, with temper rise. Pope.

7. State to which metals are reduced, particularly as to hardness.

Here draw I
A sword, whose temper I intend to stain
With the best blood that I can meet withal. Shakspeare.

Ithuriel with his spear
Touch'd lightly; for no falsehood can endure Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness: up he starts, Discover'd, and surpriz'd. Milton.

These needles should have a due temper; for, if they are too soft, the force exerted to carry them through the flesh will bend them; if they are too brittle, they snap. Sharp.

TE'MPERAMENT. n. f. [temperamentum, Latin; temperament, French.]

1. Constitution; state with respect to the predominance of any quality.

Bodies are denominated hot and cold, in proportion to the present temperament of that part of our body to which they are applied. Locke.

2. Medium; due mixture of opposites.

The common law has wasted and wrought out those distempers, and reduced the kingdom to its just state and temperament. Hale.

TEMPERAMENTAL. adj. [from tempera-ment.] Constitutional.

That temperamental dignitions, and conjecture of prevalent humours, may be collected from spots in our nails, we concede. Brown.

VOL. II.

TEM

Intellectual representations are received with as unequal a fate; upon a bare temperamental relish or disgust. Glanville.

TE'MPERANCE. n. f. [temperantia, Lat.]

1. Moderation: opposed to gluttony and drunkenness.

Observe

The rule of not too much; by temperance taught In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, not gluttonous delight. Milton.

Temperance, that virtue without pride, and fortune without envy, gives indolence of body and tranquillity of mind; the best guardian of youth and support of old age. Temple.

Make temperance thy companion; so shall health Sit on thy brow. Dodley.

2. Patience; calmness; sedateness; mode-ration of passion.

His senseless speech and doted ignorance
When as the noble prince had marked well,
He calm'd his wrath with goodly temperance. Spenser.

What, are you chaf'd?

Ask God for temperance, that's th' appliance only
Which your disease requires. Shakspeare.

TE'MPERATE. adj. [temperatus, Latin.]

1. Not excessive; moderate in degree of any quality.

Use a temperate heat, for they are ever temperate heats that digest and mature; wherein we mean temperate, according to the nature of the subject; for that may be temperate to fruits and liquors which will not work at all upon metals. Bacon.

His sleep
Was airy, light, from pure digestion bred,
And temperate vapours, bland. Milton.

2. Moderate in meat and drink.

I advis'd him to be temperate in eating and drinking. Wise man.

3. Free from ardent passion.

So hot a speed with such advice dispos'd,
Such temperate order in so fierce a course,
Doth want example. Shakspeare.

She's not forward, but modest as the dove:
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn. Shakspeare.

From temperate inactivity we are unready to put in execution the suggestions of reason. Brown.

TE'MPERATELY. adv. [from temperate.]

1. Moderately; not excessively.

By winds that temperately blow,
The bark should pass secure and slow. Addison.

2. Calmly; without violence of passion.

Temperately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress. Shakspeare.

3. Without gluttony or luxury.

God esteems it a part of his service if we eat or drink; so it be temperately, and as may best preserve health. Taylor.

TE'MPERATENESS. n. f. [from temperate.]

1. Freedom from excesses; mediocrity.

2. Calmness; coolness of mind.

Langley's mild temperateness
Did tend unto a calmer quietness. Daniel.

TE'MPERATURE. n. f. [temperatura, tem-pero, Latin; temperature, French.]

1. Constitution of nature; degree of any qualities.

It lieth in the same climate, and is of no other temperature than Guinea. Abbot.

Birds that change countries at certain seasons, if they come earlier, shew the temperature of weather. Bacon.

There may be as much difference as to the temperature of the air, and as to heat and cold, in one mile, as in ten degrees of latitude; and he that would cool and refresh himself in the summer, had better go up to the top of the next hill, than remove into a far more northern country. Brown.

Memory depends upon the consistence and the temperature of the brain. Watts.

2. Mediocrity; due balance of contrarie-ties.

TEM

As the world's sun doth effects beget

Diff'rent in divers places ev'ry day;
Here Autumn's temperature, there summer's heat,
Here flow'ry spring-tide, and there winter grey. Davies.

If, instead of this variation of heat, we suppose an equality or constant temperature of it before the deluge, the case would be much altered. Woodward.

3. Moderation; freedom from predominant passion.

In that proud port, which her so goodly graceth,
Most goodly temperature you may descry. Spenser.

TE'MPERED. adj. [from temper.] Disposed with regard to the passions.

When was my lord so much ungently tempered,
To stop his ears against admonishment? Shakspeare.

TE'MPEST. n. f. [tempeste, French; tempestas, Latin.]

1. The utmost violence of the wind: the names by which the wind is called according to the gradual increase of its force seem to be, a breeze; a gale; a gust; a storm; a tempest.

I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have riv'd the knotty oaks. Shakspeare.

Some have been driven by tempest to the south. Abbot.

What at first was call'd a gust, the same Hath now a storm's, anon a tempest's name. Donne.

We, caught in a fiery tempest, shall be hurl'd
Each on his rock transfix'd. Milton.

With clouds and storms
Around thee thrown, tempest o'er tempest roll'd, Thou humblest nature with thy northern blast. Thomson.

2. Any tumult; commotion; perturbation.

The tempest in my mind
Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
Save what beats there. Shakspeare.

To TE'MPEST. v. a. [from the noun.] To disturb as by a tempest.

Part huge of bulk,
Wallowing unwieldy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean. Milton.

TE'MPEST-BEATEN. adj. [tempest and beat.] Shattered with storms.

In the calm harbour of her gentle breast,
My tempest-beaten soul may safely rest. Dryden.

TE'MPEST-TOST. adj. [tempest and tost.] Driven about by storms.

Though his bark cannot be lost,
Yet it shall be tempest-tost. Shakspeare.

TEMPESTIVITY. n. f. [tempestivus, Lat.] Seasonableness.

Since their dispersion, the constitution of countries admit not such tempestivity of harvest. Brown.

TEMPESTUOUS. adj. [tempestueux, Fr. from tempest] Stormy; turbulent.

Tempestuous fortune hath spent all her spite,
And thrilling sorrow thrown his utmost dart. Spenser.

Which of them rising with the sun, or falling,
Should prove tempestuous. Milton.

Her looks grow black as a tempestuous wind,
Some raging thoughts are rowling in her mind. Dryden.

Pompey, when dissuaded from embarking because the weather was tempestuous, replied, My voyage is necessary, my life is not so. Collier.

TE'MPLAR. n. f. [from the Temple, a house near the Thames, anciently belong- ing to the knights templars, originally from the temple of Jerusalem.] A student in the law.

Wits and templars ev'ry sentence raise,
And wonder with a foolish face of praise. Pope.

TE'MPLE. n. f. [temple, French; templum, Latin.]

1. A place appropriated to acts of religion.

TEM

The honour'd gods
Throng our large temples with the shews of peace.

Here we have no temple but the wood, no assembly
but hornbeasts.

Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope
The lord's anointed temple, and stole thence
The life o' th' building.

2. [tempora, Latin.] The upper part of the sides of the head where the pulse is felt,

Her sunny locks
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece.
We may apply intercipients of mastic upon the temples; frontals also may be applied.
To procure sleep, he uses the scratching of the temples and ears; that even mollifies wild beasts.

The weapon enter'd close above his ear,
Cold through his temples glides the whizzing spear.

TE'MPLET. n. f. A piece of timber in a building.

When you lay any timber on brick-work, as linteols over windows, or templets under girders, lay them in loom.

TE'MPORAL. adj. [temporal, Fr. temporalis, low Latin.]

1. Measured by time; not eternal.
As there they sustain temporal life, so here they would learn to make provision for eternal.

2. Secular; not ecclesiastical.
This sceptre shews the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread of kings.
All the temporal lands, which men devout
By testament hath given to the church,
Would they strip from us.
All temporal power hath been wrested from the clergy, and much of their ecclesiastick.

3. Not spiritual.
There is scarce any of those decisions but gives good light, by way of authority or reason, to some questions that arise also between temporal dignities, especially to cases wherein some of our subordinate temporal titles have part in the controversy.
Call not every temporal end a defiling of the intention, but only when it contradicts the ends of God, or when it is principally intended: for sometimes a temporal end is part of our duty; and such are all the actions of our calling.

Prayer is the instrument of fetching down all good things to us, whether spiritual or temporal.

Our petitions to God, with regard to temporals, must be that medium of convenience proportioned to the several conditions of life.

4. [temporal, French.] Placed at the temples, or upper part of the sides of the head.

Copious bleedings, by opening the temporal arteries, are the most effectual remedies for a phrensy.

TEMPORA'LITY. } n. f. [temporalité, TE'MPORALS. } French; from temporal.] Secular possessions; not ecclesiastick rights.

Such revenues, lands, and tenements, as bishops have had annexed to their sees by the kings and others from time to time, as they are barons and lords of the parliament.

The residue of these ordinary finances is casual,
as the temporalities of vacant bishopricks, the profits that grow by the tenures of lands.

The king yielded up the point, reserving the ceremony of homage from the bishops, in respect of the temporalities, to himself.

TE'MPORALLY. adv. [from temporal.]
With respect to this life.

Sinners who are in such a temporally happy condition, owe it not to their sins, but wholly to their luck.

TE'MPORALTY. n. f. [from temporal.]
1. The laity; secular people.

TEM

The pope sucked out inestimable sums of money, to the intolerable grievance of clergy and temporality.

2. Secular possessions.

TEMPORA'NEOUS. adj. [temporis, Latin.]
Temporary.

TE'MPORARINESS. n. f. [from temporary.]
The state of being temporary; not perpetuity.

TE'MPORARY. adj. [tempus, Latin.] Lasting only for a limited time.

These temporary truces were soon made and soon broken; he desired a straiter amity.

If the Lord's immediate speaking, uttering, and writing, doth conclude by a necessary inference, that all precepts uttered and written in this manner are simply and perpetually moral; then, on the contrary, all precepts wanting this are merely temporary.

The republick, threatened with danger, appointed a temporary dictator, who, when the danger was over, retired again into the community.

To TEMPORIZE. v. n. [temporiser, Fr.
tempus, Latin.]

1. To delay; to procrastinate.
If Cupid hath not spent all his quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this shortly.
—I look for an earthquake too then.
—Well, you will temporize with the hours.

The earl of Lincoln, deceived of the country's concourse, in which case he would have temporized, resolved to give the king battle.

2. To comply with the time, or occasions.
They might their grievance inwardly complain,
But outwardly they needs must temporise.

3. To comply. This is improper.
The dauphin is too wilful opposite,
And will not temporize with my entreaties;
He flatly says, he'll not lay down his arms.

TE'MPORIZER. n. f. [temporiseur, French; from temporize.] One that complies with times or occasions; a trimmer.

I pronounce thee a hovering temporizer, that Canst with thine eyes at once see good and evil, Inclining to them both.

To TEMPT. v. a. [tento, Latin; tenter,
French.]

1. To solicit to ill; to incite by presenting some pleasure or advantage to the mind;
to entice.

'Tis not the king that sends you to the Tower:
My lady Gray tempts him to this harsh extremity.

You, ever gentle gods! take my breath from me;
Let not my worse spirit tempt me again
To die before you please.

Come together, that Satan tempt you not.

He that hath not wholly subdued himself, is quickly tempted and overcome in small things.

Fix'd on the fruit she gaz'd, which to behold
Might tempt alone.

The devil can but tempt and deceive; and if he cannot destroy so, his power is at an end.

O wretched maid!
Whose roving fancy would resolve the same
With him who next should tempt her easy fame.

2. To provoke.

I'm much too vent'rous
In tempting of your patience.

Your talons from the wretched and the bold;
Tempt not the brave and needy to despair:
For, though your violence should leave 'em bare
Of gold and silver, swords and darts remain.

3. It is sometimes used without any notion of evil; to solicit; to draw.

Still his strength conceal'd
Which tempted our attempt, and wrought our fall.

TEN

The rowing crew

To tempt a fare, clothe all their tilts in blue. Gay.
4. To try; to attempt; to venture on. I know not whether it was not originally tempt, which was vitiously written to tempt, by an elision of the wrong syllable.

This from the vulgar branches must be torn,
And to fair Proserpine the present born,
Ere leave be giv'n to tempt the nether skies.

TE'MPTABLE. adj. [from tempt.] Liable to temptation; obnoxious to bad influence. Not elegant, nor used.

If the parliament were as temptable as any other assembly, the managers must fail for want of tools to work with.

TEMPTATION. n. f. [tentation, French;
from tempt.]

1. The act of tempting; solicitation to ill;
enticement.

All temptation to transgress repel.

2. The state of being tempted.

When by human weakness, and the arts of the tempter, you are led into temptations, prayer is the thread to bring you out of this labyrinth.

3. That which is offered to the mind as a motive to ill.

Set a deep glass of rhenish wine on the contrary casket; for if the devil be within, and that temptation without, he will chuse it.

Dare to be great without a guilty crown;
View it, and lay the bright temptation down:
'Tis base to seize on all.

TE'MPTER. n. f. [from tempt.]

1. One who solicits to ill; an enticer.

These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues.
Is this her fault or mine?

The tempter or the tempted, who sins most?
Not she; nor doth she tempt.

Those who are bent to do wickedly, will never want tempters to urge them on.

My work is done:
She's now the tempter to ensnare his heart.

2. The infernal solicitor to evil.

The experience of our own frailties, and the watchfulness of the tempter, discourage us.

Foretold what would come to pass,
When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from hell.

To this high mountain's top the tempter brought Our Saviour.

TEMSE BREAD. } n. f. [temsen, Dutch; TE'MSED BREAD. } tamiser, French;
tamesare, Italian, to sift; tems, Dutch;
tamis, French; tamiso, Italian, a sieve.] Bread made of flower better sifted than common.

TE'MULENCY. n. f. [temulentia, Latin.]
Inebriation; intoxication by liquor.

TE'MULENT. adj. [temulentus, Latin.]
Inebriated; intoxicated as with strong liquors.

TEN. adj. [tyn, Saxon; tien, Dutch.]

1. The decimal number; twice five; the number by which we multiply numbers into new denominations.

Thou shalt have more Than two tens to a score.
Ten hath been extolled as containing even, odd, long, and plain, quadrate and cubical numbers; and Aristotle observed, that barbarians as well as Greeks used a numeration unto ten.

With twice ten sail I cross'd the Phrygian sea, Scarce seven within your harbour meet.

From the soft lyre,
Sweet flute, and ten-string'd instrument, require Sounds of delight.

2. Ten is a proverbial number.

T E N

T E N

There's a proud modesty in merit,
Averse from begging; and resoly'd to pay
Ten times the gift it asks.

Dryden.

Although English is too little cultivated, yet the faults are nine in ten owing to affectation.

Swift.

TENABLE. adj. [tenable, French.] Such as may be maintained against opposition;
such as may be held against attacks.

The town was strong of itself, and wanted no industry to fortify and make it tenable.

Bacon.

Sir William Ogle seized upon the castle, and put it into a tenable condition.

Clarendon.

Infidelity has been driven out of all its outworks:
the atheist has not found his post tenable, and is therefore retired into deism.

Spektator.

TENACIOUS. adj. [tenax, Latin.]

1. Grasping hard; inclined to hold fast; not willing to let go: with of before the thing held.

A resolute tenacious adherence to well-chosen principles, makes the face of a governor shine in the eyes of those that see his actions.

South.

Gripping, and still tenacious of thy hold, Would'st thou the Grecian chiefs, though largely foul'd,

Should give the prizes they had gain'd?

Dryden.

You reign absolute over the hearts of a stubborn and freeborn people, tenacious to madness of their liberty.

Dryden.

True love's a miser; so tenacious grown,
He weighs to the least grain of what's his own.

Dryden.

Men are tenacious of the opinions that first possess them.

Locke.

He is tenacious of his own property, and ready to invade that of others.

Arbutnot.

2. Retentive.

The memory in some is very tenacious; but yet there seems to be a constant decay of all our ideas, even of those which are struck deepest, and in minds
the most retentive.

Locke.

3. [tenace, French.] Having parts disposed to adhere to each other; cohesive;
viscous; glutinous.

Three equal round vessels filled, the one with water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors stirred alike to give them a vortical motion; the pitch by its tenacity will lose its motion quickly, the oil being less tenacious will keep it longer, and the water being less tenacious will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time.

Newton.

4. Niggardly; close-fisted; meanly parsimonious.

Ainsworth.

TENACIOUSLY. adv. [from tenacious.]
With disposition to hold fast.

Some things our juvenile reasons tenaciously adhere to, which yet our maturer judgments disallow of.

Glanville.

TENACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from tenacious.]
Unwillingness to quit, resign, or let go.

TENACITY. n. f. [tenacité, French; tenacitas, tenax, Latin.] Viscosity; gluti-nousness; adhesion of one part to another.

If many contiguous vortices of molten pitch were each of them as large as those which some suppose to revolve about the sun and fixed stars, yet these and all their parts would, by their tenacity and stiffness, communicate their motion to one another till they all rested among themselves.

Newton.

Substances, whose tenacity exceeds the power of digestion, will neither pass, nor be converted into aliment.

Arbutnot.

TENANCY. n. f. [tenanche, old French; tenentia, law Latin, from tenant.] Temporary possession of what belongs to another.

This duke becomes seized of favour by descent, though the condition of that estate be commonly no more than a tenancy at will.

Watton.

TENANT. n. f. [tenant, French.]

1. One that holds of another; one that on certain conditions has temporary possession and use of that which is in reality the property of another: correlative to landlord.

I have been your tenant,
And your father's tenant, these fourscore years.

Shakspeare.

The English being only tenants at will of the natives for such conveniency of fishing.

Heylyn.

Such is the mould, that the blest tenant feeds
On precious fruits, and pays his rent in weeds.

Waller.

Jupiter had a farm long for want of a tenant.

L'Estrange.

His cheerful tenants bless their yearly toil,
Yet to their lord owe more than to the soil.

Pope.

The tenants of a manor fall into the sentiments of their lord.

Watts.

The father is a tyrant over slaves and beggars, whom he calls his tenants.

Swift.

2. One who resides in any place.

O fields, O woods, oh when shall I be made

The happy tenant of your shade!

Cowley.

The bear, rough tenant of these shades.

Thomson.

TO TENANT. v. a. [from the noun.]

To hold on certain conditions.

Sir Roger's estate is tenanted by persons who have served him or his ancestors.

Addison.

TENANTABLE. adj. [from tenant.] Such as may be held by a tenant.

The ruins that time, sickness, or melancholy, shall bring, must be made up at your cost; for that thing a husband is but tenant for life in what he holds, and is bound to leave the place tenantable to the next that shall take it.

Suckling.

That the soul may not be too much incommoded in her house of clay, such necessaries are secured to the body as may keep it in tenantable repair.

Decay of Piety.

TENANTLESS. adj. [from tenant.] Unoccupied; unpossessed.

O thou, that dost inhabit in my breast,

Leave not the mansion so long tenantless;

Left growing ruinous the building fall,

And leave no memory of what it was!

Shakspeare.

TENANT-SAW. n. f. [corrupted, I suppose, from tenon-saw.] See TENON.

TENCH. n. f. [tince, Saxon; tinca, Lat.]
A pond fish.

Having stored a very great pond with carps, tench, and other pond-fish, and only put in two small pikes,
this pair of tyrants in seven years devoured the whole.

Hale.

TO TEND. v. a. [contracted from attend.]

1. To watch; to guard; to accompany as an assistant or defender.

Nymphs of Mulla which, with careful heed,
The silver scaly trouts did tend full well.

Spenser.

Go thou to Richard, and good angels tend thee!

Shakspeare.

Him lord pronounce'd; and, O! indignity,
Subjected to his service angel wings,
And flaming ministers to watch and tend
Their earthy charge.

Milton.

He led a rural life, and had command
O'er all the shepherds, who about those vales

Tended their numerous flocks.

Dryden and Lee.

There is a pleasure in that simplicity, in beholding princes tending their flocks.

Pope.

Our humbler province is to tend the fair;
To save the powder from too rude a gale,
Nor let th' imprison'd essences exhale.

Pope.

2. To attend; to accompany.

Despair

Tended the sick, busiest from couch to couch.

Milt.

Those with whom I now converse

Without a tear will tend my herse.

Swift.

3. To be attentive to.

Unluck'd of lamb or kid that tend their play.

Milton.

TO TEND. v. n. [tendo, Latin.]

1. To move toward a certain point or place.

They had a view of the princess at a mask, having overheard two gentlemen tending towards that fight.

Watton.

To these abodes our fleet Apollo sends:

Here Dardanus was born, and hither tends.

2. [tendre, French.] To be directed to any end or purpose; to aim at.

Admiration seiz'd

All heav'n, what this might mean, and whither tend.

Milton.

Factions gain their power by pretending common safety, and tending towards it in the directest course.

Temple.

The laws of our religion tend to the universal happiness of mankind.

Tillotson.

3. To contribute.

Many times that which we ask would, if it should be granted, be worse for us, and perhaps tend to our destruction; and then God, by denying the particular matter of our prayers, doth grant the general matter
of them.

Hammond.

4. [from attend.] To wait; to expect.
Out of use.

The bark is ready, and the wind at help;

Th' associates tend.

Shakspeare.

5. To attend; to wait as dependants or servants.

have a more particular tendency to the good of their country, than any other compositions.

Addison.

We may acquaint ourselves with the powers and properties, the tendencies and inclinations, of body and spirit.

Watts.

All of them are innocent, and most of them had a moral tendency, to soften the virulence of parties, or laugh out of countenance some vice or folly.

Swift.

2. Direction or course toward any inference or result; drift.

The greater congruity or incongruity there is in any thing to the reason of mankind, and the greater tendency it hath to promote or hinder the perfection of man's nature, so much greater degrees hath it of moral good or evil; to which we ought to proportion our inclination, or aversion.

Wilkins.

These opinions are of so little moment, that, like motes in the sun, their tendencies are little noticed.

Locke.

Those parts of nature into which the chaos was divided, they signified by dark and obscure names, which we have expressed in their plain and proper terms. Burnet.

In painting, the greatest beauties cannot always be expressed for want of terms. Dryden.

Had the Roman tongue continued vulgar, it would have been necessary, from the many terms of art required in trade and in war, to have made great additions to it. Swift.

3. Words; language.

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan,
I would invent as bitter searching terms,
As curst, as harsh, as horrible to hear. Shakspeare.

God to Satan first his doom apply'd,
Though in mysterious terms. Milton.

4. Condition; stipulation.

Well, on my terms thou wilt not be my heir? Dryden.

TER

Enjoy thy love, since such is thy desire:
Live, though unhappy, live on any terms. Dryden.
Did religion bestow heaven, without any terms or conditions, indifferently upon all, there would be no infidel. Bentley.

We flattered ourselves with reducing France to our own terms by the want of money, but have been still disappointed by the great sums imported from America. Addison.

5. [termine, old Fr.] Time for which any thing lasts; a limited time.

I am thy father's spirit,
Doom'd for a certain term to walk the night. Shakspeare.

Why should Rome fall a moment ere her time?
No; let us draw her term of freedom out
In its full length, and spin it to the last. Addison.

6. [In law.] The time in which the tribunals are open to all that list to complain of wrong, or to seek their right by course of law; the rest of the year is called vacation. Of these terms there are four in every year, during which matters of justice are dispatched: one is called Hilary term, which begins the twenty-third of January, or, if that be Sunday, the next day following, and ends the twenty-first of February; another is called Easter term, which begins eighteen days after Easter, and ends the Monday next after Ascension-day; the third is Trinity term, beginning the Friday next after Trinity Sunday, and ending the Wednesday fortnight after; the fourth is Michaelmas term, beginning the sixth of November, or, if that be Sunday, the next day after, and ending the twenty-eighth of November. Cowell.

The term suiters may speed their business: for the end of these sessions delivereth them space enough to overtake the beginning of the terms. Carew.

Too long vacation hasten'd on his term. Milton.
Those men employed as justices daily in term time consult with one another. Hale.

What are these to those vast heaps of crimes
Which terms prolong? Dryden.

To TERM. v. a. [from the noun.] To name; to call.

2. To put an end to: as, to terminate any difference.

To TERMINATE. v. n. To be limited; to end; to have an end; to attain its end.

These are to be reckoned with the heathen, with whom you know we undertook not to meddle, treating only of the scripture-election terminated in those to whom the scripture is revealed. Hammond.

That God was the maker of this visible world, was evident from the very order of causes; the greatest argument by which natural reason evinces a God: it being necessary in such a chain of causes to ascend to, and terminate in, some first; which should be the original of motion, and the cause of all other things, but itself be caused by none. South.

The wisdom of this world, its designs and efficacy, terminate on this side heaven. South.

Ere I the rapture of my wish renew,
I tell you then, it terminates in you. Dryden.

TERMINATION. n. f. [from terminate.]

Like an huge giant of the Titan race. Spenser.
Terrestrial heav'n! danc'd round by other heav'ns
That shine, yet bear their bright officious lamps, Light above light. Milton.

Thou brought'st Briareus with his hundred hands,
So call'd in heav'n; but mortal men below
By his terrestrial name Ægeon know. Dryden.

2. Consisting of earth; terreous. Improper.

I did not confine these observations to land, or terrestrial parts of the globe, but extended them to the fluids. Woodward.

To TERRESTRIFY. v. a. [terrestris and facio, Lat.] To reduce to the state of earth.

Though we should affirm, that heaven were but earth celestified, and earth but heaven terrestified; or, that each part above had an influence on its divided affinity below; yet to single out these relations is a work to be effected by revelation. Brown.

TERRESTRIOUS. adj. [terrestris, Lat. terestre, Fr.] Terreous; earthy; consisting of earth.

This variation proceedeth from terrestrious eminences of earth respecting the needle. Brown.

TERRIBLE. adj. [terrible, Fr. from terribilis, Lat.]

1. Dreadful; formidable; causing fear.

TER

Was this a face to be expos'd
In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick, cross lightning? Shakspeare.

Fit love for gods,
Not terrible, though terrour be in love. Milton.

Thy native Latium was thy darling care,
Prudent in peace, and terrible in war. Prior.

2. Great, so as to offend: a colloquial hyperbole.

Being indisposed by the terrible coldness of the season, he repesed himself till the weather should mend. Clarendon.

2. Trial; examination: as by the cupel.

All thy vexations
Were but my trials of thy love, and thou Hast strangely stood the test. Shakspeare.

Let there be some more test made of my metal,
Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamp'd upon it. Shakspeare.

They who thought worst of the Scots, did not think there would be no fruit or discovery from that test. Clarendon.

What use of oaths, of promise, or of test,
Where men regard no God but interest? Waller.
Thy virtue, prince, has stood the test of fortune
Like purest gold, that, tortur'd in the furnace, Comes out more bright, and brings forth all its weight. Addison.

3. Means of trial.

Whom should my muse then fly to, but the best
Of kings for grace; of poets, for my test? Ben Jonson.

To be read herself she need not fear;
Each test, and every light, her muse will bear. Dryden.

Your noble race
We banish not, but they forsake the place:
Our doors are open: True; but, ere they come,
You toss your censuring test, and fume the room. Dryden.

4. That with which any thing is compared in order to prove its genuineness.

Unerring Nature, still divinely bright,
One clear, unchang'd and universal light,
Life, force, and beauty, must to all impart,
At once the source, and end, and test of art. Pope.

5. Discriminative characteristic.

Our penal laws no sons of yours admit,
Our test excludes your tribe from benefit. Dryden.

6. Judgment; distinction.

Who would excel, when few can make a test

TESTACEOUS. adj. [testaceus, Lat. testacée, French.]

1. Consisting of shells; composed of shells.

2. Having continuous, not jointed shells: opposed to crustaceous.

Testaceous, with naturalists, is a term given only to such fish whose strong and thick shells are entire, and of a piece; because those which are jointed, as the lobsters, are crustaceous: but in medicine, all preparations of shells, and substances of the like kind, are thus called. Quincy.

Several shells were found upon the shores, of the crustaceous and testaceous kind. Woodward.

The mineral particles in these shells are plainly to be distinguished from the testaceous ones, or the texture and substance of the shell. Woodward.

TESTAMENT. n. f. [testament, Fr. tes-tamentum, Lat.]
